How the High Commission is Seen in England.

No Position on the Alabama Question Abandoned.

The Attempt at Self-Government by the French People.

But Few Republicans Among the Successful Candidates.

Germany Organizing an Imperial Army.

The New Spanish King Among the Other Sovereignties.

THE HIGH COMMISSION.

Position of Great Britain as Defined by the London Times—No Abandonment of Her Position upon the Alabama Question—An Element of Interest Omitted.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—The Times of today in its remarks upon the portion of the royal speech announcing the reference of the American questions to a Joint High Commission, says:

"Although the Alabama question is secondary to that of the fisheries as a subject for consideration by the Commission, yet there is no doubt as to which question will mainly engage its attention. But it is erroneous to suppose that it is the purpose of the Commission to find ground for England to abandon her position, or to concede her liability upon the Alabama question."

NO BASIS.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—The Standard of today, in an editorial on the Queen's speech, says the fact of the appointment of a Joint Commission for the settlement of the Alabama difficulties with the United States, would be more interesting to the public if the basis upon which the Commission is to operate were known.

FRANCE

The Election—Trochu Among the Candidates Chosen—Few Republicans Elected—Gambetta's Ticket Successful in the North—Facilities for Telegraphing Election News.

HAVRE, Feb. 10.—Gens. LE FLO and FROUSSARD are among the candidates elected to the Assembly in the Department of Finisterre.

FEW REPUBLICANS CHOSEN.

VERSAILLES, Feb. 10.—Returns from eleven departments indicate the election of the Bonapartist, Orleanist and Clerical candidates, but of very few Republicans.

The duration of the armistice will probably be extended, in order that the Assembly may have time to perfect the work of restoration.

THE GAMBETTA TICKET.

LONDON, Feb. 9.—In the elections at Brest and Havre the Gambetta ticket has been carried by a heavy majority.

GERMAN COURTESY.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—The German telegraph offices in France have been ordered to transmit French official messages relative to the elections and provisioning of Paris.

The Paris War Contribution—Delivering up Her Arms—Sale of the French Arms Silenced in Switzerland—Provisions for the Fugitives—Sympathy of the King of Sweden.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—A dispatch from Berlin says the war contribution of 200,000,000 of francs exacted from Paris, has been apportioned—120,000,000 to North Germany and 80,000,000 to South Germany.

THE GUNS AND SMALL ARMS.

A dispatch from Versailles says the delivery of the cannon and small arms of the Army of Paris to the Germans was commenced on the 6th, and continued throughout the 8th inst.

THE FRENCH IN SWITZERLAND.

BERNE, Feb. 9.—The Swiss Government has ordered the sale of the horses belonging to the French cavalry interned in Switzerland.

Sixty-two railway wagons laden with provisions for the French prisoners have arrived in Switzerland from France.

SYMPATHY OF SWEDEN WITH FRANCE.

A London telegram says the Prussians have captured a letter from the King of Sweden expressing the warmest sympathy for France.

M. Favre in Communication with an Orleans Prince.

LONDON, Feb. 10—4½ P. M.—According to a report in the Gaulois, M. FAVRE has gone to Antwerp to communicate with one of the Orleans Princes.

A dispatch just received from Brussels states that M. FAVRE arrived in that city on Tuesday night.

Aid for the French—The Boston Fund—Action in Cleveland and San Francisco.

BOSTON, Feb. 10.—The amount already subscribed to the French Charity Fund in this city is $60,000.

CLEVELAND, Feb. 10.—At a meeting of citizens of this city, last evening, the Northern Ohio Relief Association was formed, with Mayor BUHRER, President; T. P. HANDY, President of the Merchants' National Bank, Treasurer; and L. F. MELLEN, Secretary, with fifty Vice-Presidents distributed among the important towns of Northern Ohio. The object of the organization is for the purpose of soliciting money, grain and seeds to send to the suffering and impoverished French and Germans in Europe.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 10.—The Stock Exchange of this city has appropriated $1,000 in aid of the French Relief Fund, to be sent to New-York immediately. At a meeting of a committee of the Chamber of Commerce, an appeal for the same cause was responded to with unexpected liberality.

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

An Imperial German Army Forming—Earthquake in Germany—The Prussian Diet—The Austrian Reichsrath.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—A dispatch from Versailles of the 10th gives a report that an Imperial German Army is in process of formation. The Thirteenth Army Corps will consist of Würtemberg and Hessian troops.

EARTHQUAKE SHOCKS.

Violent shocks of earthquake were felt at Darmstadt this morning.

PRUSSIA.

BERLIN, Feb. 9.—The Prussian Diet will probably close its sessions on the 18th inst.

AUSTRIA.

VIENNA, Feb. 9.—The Vienna Gazette of today contains an autograph letter from the Emperor FRANCIS JOSEPH to M. HOHENWART, convoking the Reichsrath on the 20th of February.

The New Spanish Dynasty—Austria and Italy—A Fund Voted in Italy for the Pope—The Bey of Tunis Coming to Terms—Roumania—Death of an English Divine—King Charles XV. of Sweden.

VIENNA, Feb. 9.—The Emperor has received a letter from King AMADEUS announcing his accession to the throne of Spain.

PAPAL RECOGNITION.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—A special dispatch to the London Telegraph announces the early recognition by the Pope of the new Spanish dynasty.

SUPPORT OF THE POPE.

FLORENCE, Feb. 9.—The Italian Chamber of Deputies has approved the bill authorizing a Financial Convention with Austria.

The bill providing for the establishment of a fund for the support of the Pope, was finally passed.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—HUSSEIN BEY has left Tunis for Florence, with power to settle the questions at issue between Tunis and Italy.

TURKEY AND ROUMANIA.

The report that the Turks are about to form a camp at Shumla, threatening Roumania, is denied on credible authority.

DEATH OF AN ENGLISH PREACHER.

Rev. HENRY MELVILLE, an eloquent preacher, and one of the Chaplains to the Queen, died, yesterday, in the seventy-third year of his age.

ILLNESS OF THE KING OF SWEDEN.

STOCKHOLM, Feb. 9.—King CHARLES XV. is quite ill. The malady is not of a dangerous nature, but this recovery will be slow.

CASUALTIES.

Gunpowder Explosion in a West Virginia Coal-Mine—Three Men Killed—Fatal Coal-Oil Lamp Accident—Struck by a Locomotive—Wreck of a Coal Schooner.

WHEELING, West Virginia, Feb. 10.—A correspondent of the Register says that on Thursday last an explosion occurred in the asphaltum coal-mines of Ritchie County, situated about fifteen miles from Cairo, Ritchie County, by which three men lost their lives, and several others were covered up in the mines. The fate of the latter is yet unknown. The explosion was caused by the ignition of a keg of powder by some means unknown.

HARTFORD, Conn., Feb. 10.—JAMES ADAMS, nearly eighty years old, was struck by an engine on the Hartford, Providence and Fishkill Railroad this afternoon, knocked down and the cars ran over one of his arms. It is thought that he cannot live. He was walking on the track.

BALTIMORE, Md., Feb. 10.—Mrs. HODGES, wife of Police Officer G. A. HODGES, residing in East-street-avenue, was terribly burned last night by the explosion of a coal-oil lamp, from the effects of which she died.

HARTFORD, Ct., Feb. 10.—The schooner Oliver Spellman, bound to New-London, with a cargo of coal, struck the Saybrook Bar, this afternoon. The crew are all ashore. Two and a half feet of water is in the hold, and the wind is blowing strong.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Feb. 10.—As HERMANN BORGMAN, wife and two children were crossing Moreau Creek, five miles from Jefferson City, yesterday afternoon, the wagon was upset, and Mrs. BORGMAN and the children were drowned.

FIRES AND LOSS OF LIFE.

Sewing-Machine Factory Burned and Three Lives Lost—A Dwelling and Two Children Burned.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Feb. 10.—The Howe sewing-machine manufactory, in Peru, was entirely destroyed by fire this morning. The loss is $100,000; partly insured. The fire is supposed to have originated in the dry kiln. Three men perished in the flames.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Feb. 10.—Further particulars of the fire at Peru, Ind., this morning, state that the foundry and saw-mill connected with the sewing machine factory were saved. Loss now estimated at $30,000. Insurance, $26,000. Three lives were lost, viz.: E. P. LOVELAND, formerly editor of the Miami County Republican; JOHN CUMMINGS, and a third person, name unknown.

DOYLESTOWN, Penn., Feb. 10.—A dwelling-house in Northampton Township was burned last night. Two children perished and their mother was seriously burned.

CUBA.

Capture and Execution of an Insurgent Leader—A Surrendered Leader Acts as a Spanish Guide—Cespedes no Longer Recognized—The Cuban Chambers Dissolved—Agramonte Victator.

HAVANA, Feb. 10.—FERNANDO ESTRATA, one of the insurgent leaders, was captured by the Sub-Prefect, and executed at Moron. It is reported that the insurgent General, JESUS DEL SOL, who surrendered to the Spanish authorities, now acts as guide to the troops. The insurgent General URANGA, or YUCTAN, a native of Mexico, was killed at Vistahermosa. A correspondent of the Diario writes that the surrendered insurgents report that the Cuban Chambers has been dissolved, and that CESPEDES is not recognized. IGNACIO AGRAMONTE has been appointed Dictator. Gen. FERRER, commanding at Holguin, is to assume the command of the Tunas District. A telegram from Trinidad says that JUMENTO has established himself at Salvator Santos, and that PEDRO ACOSTA, an insurgent leader, was killed near Ears Small-pox exists at Puerto Principe.

WASHINGTON.

Prompt Confirmation of the High Commissioners—Position of Senator Williams—The New Currency—The Appropriation Bills—Admiral Porter Again Assailed—The New National Loan.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—The Senate went into Executive Session, today, at 1 o'clock, on motion of Senator MORTON, and soon afterward confirmed four of the High Commissioners, viz., FISH, NELSON, SCHENCK, and HOAR. There were but four dissenting votes, viz., SPRAGUE, PRATT, VICKERS, and DAVIS. There then followed a long discussion on the question whether the appointment of Senator WILLIAMS was not prohibited by that provision of the Constitution which declares that no member of Congress shall be appointed to any office which was created, or of which the emoluments were increased during his term of office. But it was finally decided that this appointment was certainly not created by virtue of any law or provision of the Constitution enacted during Mr. WILLIAMS' term, and he was therefore confirmed. He will probably not qualify before the expiration of his Senatorial term, unless he shall conclude to resign prior thereto. On Tuesday of the present week the Foreign Affairs Committees of both Houses, which were separately engaged in the consideration of the Alabama claims, received an intimation that it would be well to postpone the consideration of the question for the present. Both Committees have, therefore, suspended action on the subject, and nothing more will probably be done in Congress. The awkward manner in which some of your contemporaries attempt to cover up their ridiculous blunders made in the attempt to state the new negotiations in advance is very amusing. For instance, it is stated that it was at first determined to have but three Commissioners on the part of the United States, and that that determination was changed at the last moment and Gen. SCHENCK added, which accounts for his not going to England next week. This is simply an attempt to make the facts square with the hap-hazard statements. The number of Commissioners was not changed at the last moment, and by reference to the London dispatches it will be seen that England sends five instead of three, because the United States insisted on five from the first. The fact is that the TIMES is the only paper that had the facts in the case. The rest had mere rumor and guesswork.

THE NEW CURRENCY.

The Banking and Currency Committee further considered today Gen. GARFIELD'S bill providing for the reprinting of the national bank currency. It was decided not to call in the currency for reissue on new plates all at once, but to begin with the mutilated currency first, together with the new currency called for by new banks. It is expected that this bill will be matured and ready for consideration next week.

THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

The House today made some further progress on the Appropriation bills by passing the Naval bill, and agreeing on the conference report on the Pension bill. There remain yet for consideration by the House the Army, River and Harbor, the Fortification, the Deficiency, and the sundry civil bills. The Senate as yet has made very little progress with the different bills. It has passed the Pension, Military Academy and Consular and Diplomatic bills, and is holding a session tonight on the Legislative, Executive and Judicial bill. Among the amendments proposed to this bill by the Senate Committee, is one fixing the salaries of the Judges on a much more liberal basis than that allowed by the House: Chief-Justice, $10,500 per annum; Associate Justices, $10,000 each; Circuit Court Judges, $7,500; Chief-Justices of the Court of Claims and of the District of Columbia Court, $6,500 each; Associate Justices of the Court of Claims and of the Supreme Court of the District, $6,000, and District Judges, $5,000 each.

ADMIRAL PORTER AGAIN ATTACKED.

Admiral PORTER was "resurrected," as Gen. BUTLER termed it, in the House today, and furnished the subject of some exceedingly personal and spiteful utterances. While bills of a private nature were in order during the morning hour, Mr. STARKWEATHER, of Connecticut, from the Naval Committee, reported the Senate bill authorizing the President to restore WILLIAM L. HANSCOM to the position he held some time ago as Naval Constructor. HANSCOM, it seems, resigned pending certain charges against him, or under circumstances that amounted to compulsion. Mr. ARCHER caused a letter from Admiral PORTER to be read at the Clerk's desk, which charged HANSCOM with complicity with certain dishonorable proceedings at the Navy-yard. This brought out Gen. BANKS, who defended HANSCOM, and hurled the most unseemly invective against PORTER, whom he accused of conspiring with certain Bureau officers to have HANSCOM removed on account of his honesty in expressing opinions unfavorable to their plans. He called HANSCOM as superior to PORTER as the Apostle John was to Judas Iscariot. The previous question was ordered by a majority sufficient to refuse the yeas and nays, and afterward SARGENT and FARNSWORTH got the floor to defend PORTER. Gen. BUTLER embraced the opportunity to say what mean things he could think of regarding PORTER, and rather exceeded Gen. BANKS in that line, as might be expected. The bill was passed. At the conclusion of the scene it was privately remarked in the House that it was passing strange that Gen. BANKS should win such fame as an orator yesterday, and destroy it all by such an ebullition of hate and undignified wrath today.

THE NEW NATIONAL LOAN.

Secretary BOUTWELL will very soon begin negotiations for disposing of the new national loan, and he is now placing the subscription papers abroad and in this country. Some of the great houses in Great Britain which would not take our loans during the war, are now regretting the course they then pursued, and express a desire to subscribe to the new loan authorized. To-morrow, seventeen hundred subscription lists will be sent to the national banks to give them an opportunity to exchange their five-twenties for this new loan, if they choose to take that course.

THE EDUCATION REPORT.

Senator ANTHONY, from the Printing Committee, made a second attempt today to have passed the resolution to print 20,000 copies of the Educational Report for 1870. There is considerable opposition to it, and it may not pass at all. There were, on the occasion when the proposition was first made, some pretty free expressions as to the worthlessness of the report; but it is in favor of the passage that the copies called for will only cost $10,000.

DONATION TO THE MUSEUM OF THE LAND OFFICE.

The Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office has received from J. DICKINSON, Esq., of New-York, for the Geological Museum, a suite of classified specimens of diamond carbonate, bort and diamond bort, in their proximate stages of formation, together with some carbon dust, produced by abraiding one piece of carbon or diamond against another, in the process of shaping for ornamental and other purposes. The ordinary or white diamond has of late been used for drilling, turning and dressing stone, as well as for planing and boring steel and other metals, but the cost has been a great objection to its extended application; the diamond carbonate, or black diamond, has been substituted, which also has the further advantage of being considerably harder than the white transparent diamond, and consequently has been applied to shaping and polishing the latter. The shaping of diamonds for ornamental purposes is comparatively a modern art. History informs us that LOUIS VAN BERGEN, of Burges, in 1456, first invented a process for cutting then polishing, abrading one diamond against another, and by polishing them afterward with the powder produced therefrom. This is said to be one of the earliest patents granted. After careful research and inquiry both here and in Europe, it was found that neither the opaque, black, nor transparent diamond had ever been shaped, into angular forms for the mechanic arts.

The merit of this invention belongs to Mr. DICKINSON, and the Land Office is especially indebted to Dr. OTT, of New-York, for his exertions in obtaining this valuable donation to the museum connected with the General Land Office.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

THE SENATE AND THE NEW COMMISSION.

During the discussion in Executive Session, Mr. SUMNER spoke of his knowledge of three of the British Commissioners, they being not only shrewd statesmen but thoroughly acquainted with the questions with which they will have to deal. He did not, as had been stated, oppose the appointment of the Commissioners on the part of the United States, but voted for the confirmation of all of them. He, however, desired due caution. Having assented to the appointment of a Joint High Commission, he desired its labors to be satisfactory to our country, as we could not afford to make another failure in the effort to settle the pending questions between the United States and Great Britain. The President was this evening officially informed of the confirmation of the Commissioners.

NOMINATIONS.

The following nominations were sent to the Senate today:

A. P. Lathrop to be Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fourth District of Virginia; B. W. Roberts, Collector of Customs at Belfast, Me.; Stephen Longfellow, Collector of Customs at Machias, Me.

CONFIRMED.

The Senate today confirmed BOWEN MATTOCK as Appraiser of Merchandise at Cincinnati. This was in order to correct a clerical error in the confirmations of the 2d inst.

NATIONAL BANK NOTES AS LEGAL TENDER.

The United States Treasurer today wrote a letter to a party in New-York, concerning the question whether notes of national banks are legal tender. After reciting and commenting on sections of the National Bank act, he concludes as follows:

"As you allude to the principle involved, it may be proper for me to say that to make national bank notes a legal tender for all payments would virtually exempt the banks from redeeming them, since they would be as available for all purposes, except the reserves of the banks, as the notes of the United States, in which they are redeemable. The whole national bank circulation of the country would thus become a permanent loan, without interest, from the people to the banks, and would operate as a tax upon the people in favor of the banks to just the amount of the interest on the bank notes in circulation. Such a policy is indefensible on every ground of principle or expediency, and the propriety of its adoption will scarcely admit of discussion."

THE GALLOWS IN MARYLAND.

Execution of the Mulatto, John Martin, at Frederick, and John Howard at Cumberland.

FREDERICK, Md., Feb. 10.—JOHN MARTIN, a mulatto, twenty-one years of age, was hanged, today, in the jail-yard, in this city, at 1¼ o'clock, for committing a rape on Mrs. MARGARET BUTCHER, a white woman, eighty-two years of age, residing near Mount Pleasant, on the 6th of April last. The prisoner was engaged in religious devotions for several hours during the forenoon, and professed that he was reconciled to his fate. His farewell address was read from the scaffold by Rev. I. C. HUMMER, who ministered to the condemned man in his last hours. He said in his address that the Court had dealt justly with him. He returned thanks to all who had been concerned in his trial and imprisonment, and met his fate with apparent composure. In a few words, addressed to the crowd of 3,000 persons assembled to witness his execution, he warned them to avoid his fate. The Frederick Examiner of a day or two ago had the following, referring to JOHN MARTIN:

"Efforts have been made to have his punishment commuted to imprisonment for life, but the Governor turned a deaf ear to all appeals for Executive clemency. For a long time the prisoner persisted in his innocence, but last week he made a full confession to his spiritual advisers, admitting that he was guilty of the crime for which he was convicted. He stated that the reason why he denied it was on account of his mother, who was also confined in jail for resisting the officers at the time of the arrest of her son, but on Monday last she was pardoned by Gov. BOWIE, and is now at liberty, therefore she will not be compelled to witness the execution of her son."

EXECUTION OF HOWARD.

CUMBERLAND, Md., Feb. 10.—JOHN HOWARD was executed today for the murder of HENRY MILLER. The drop fell at 12½ o'clock P. M. His neck was broken, and he died with but a slight struggle. The execution took place about one mile from the city, whither he was escorted by a detachment of State militia, and followed by several thousand persons. On the scaffold he made a rambling speech, accusing one of the witnesses against him of perjury. He then bade adieu to his spiritual advisers, the Sheriff and others, and said he was a Christian and ready to die. It is stated that HOWARD was intoxicated when he made the speech, liquor having been administered to enable him to keep up. The crowd was orderly. The Cumberland Alleghanian, of Wednesday, said of the approaching execution:

"The place determined upon for the purpose is on the Almshouse property, north-east of the city. A detachment of twenty-five men from the Fifteenth Infantry, M. N. G., under command of Capt. NEILL WOODROW, is detailed as the guard on the occasion. Notwithstanding the near approach of the day of doom, HOWARD continues cheerful and appears to be resigned to his fate. HOWARD has made a full confession of the circumstances attending the crime for which he is to be hung."

A Baltimore telegram gives the following regarding his previous history:

"HOWARD is twenty-nine years old, a native of Georgia, and removed to the State of New-York at an early age. During the war he served in a New-York regiment, deserted, and afterward enlisted in the navy, and was mustered out at the close of the war. It is also stated that he served a term in Sing Sing prison, New-York, for house-breaking. He has made a confession of the murder of MILLER."

Execution of Mary Wallis—State of the Culprit for Some Time Before the Execution.

BALTIMORE, Md., Feb. 10.—MARY WALLIS, colored, was executed in the jail-yard of Prince George County today, at 12:18 o'clock noon. The number of persons present was small, and composed about equally of white and colored people. She had been convicted of murder, having poisoned an infant child in the family she was serving at Bladensburg. The Marlboro' Gazette, of the 9th, said of the culprit's condition for some time previous to the execution:

"It is reported that this unfortunate creature does not, even now, believe she is to be hung. Having heard that a petition had been made in her behalf, she professes to have been led to think she was to be pardoned, and has not, we understand from good authority, yet been brought to a sense of her condition—rather treating with levity the admonitions of the ministers of the Gospel who have visited her. This seems in keeping with her conduct at and since her trial, and many were led to believe she was at least weak-minded—an impression not borne out, it seems, by the testimony of those who have always known her."

THE RECENT DISASTER.

Possible Answer of the Question, Who Was to Blame?

Result of Personal Examinations and Inquiries—Continuation of the Coroner's Inquest—Story of the Fireman of the Engine of the Pacific Train—"Doc Simmons" Heroism.

From Our Special Correspondent.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Friday, Feb. 10, 1871.

Every hour seems to bring new evidence to prove the truth of the statements made in previous letters of your correspondent regarding the dreadful accident on the Hudson River Road, and the events that have followed it. From conversations with Messrs. LeRoy, Watson, Sinserbaugh, Carol, Millard, Johnson, Fuller, Deerman and other most respectable residents of New-Hamburg, it has been learned that there is a watchman who lives in a cabin just north of the entrance to the tunnel. He flags and signals the trains night and day. He flagged the wrecked oil-train on the night of the slaughter. It was all right when it passed. There is a sharp curve at the north tunnel entrance, and until this is rounded the engineer cannot see the other end. The TIMES correspondent and others made a very close examination of the premises this morning. They could not see the signal at the end of the tunnel opposite the New-Hamburg station, not even by standing on the extreme end of the rails on both sides. No other signal was stationary except that on the draw. That night a cloud of witnesses say that a white light (meaning "all right") was there shown.

Mr. J. R. LAWSON says that when the freight oil-train came down that night he had just gone to his berth. He was not asleep; heard a "thump! thump!" next he heard a crash. He knew something was wrong, sprung up, dressed, and went to the bridge; found the oil-tank car overturned upon the track. He thinks it was at least four minutes from the time the oil-train wreck occurred to the time of the collision. He saw the white light "all right" hung upon the draw. It remained there until the collision. He says he, or any sober man, could have climbed up the ladder and placed the red light, signal of danger, there half a dozen times before the ill-fated up "Pacific Express" train arrived. Without exception, all the citizens there (not hired by the Railroad Company) declare that the doomed up "Pacific Express" train could have seen the draw signal "all right" (white light) at least a mile and a half distant. The train can be seen leaving Low Point, three miles distant. An ordinary red light (signal of danger) could be seen at least two miles distant. If the Company had provided a tower signal, as the New-York and New-Haven, and other Companies do, the slaughter might not have happened.

DEFENSE OF THE VILLAGERS.

The people of New-Hamburg did not steal the baggage, jewelry, &c., as alleged; they did all they could for the dead and injured; the thieves of New-York and other places seemed to come up afterward; there was no force to prevent it. They saw the vandalism of certain outsiders, many of them unknown roughs, and did all they could to prevent it; the accusation against them was very unjust.

BODIES NOT RECOVERED.

I am informed by a gentleman from New-Hamburg, that he saw a man at that place yesterday, who told him that his wife and child took passage on the ill-fated train at New-York for the West. He stated that he had been to this city to examine the bodies recovered, and could find no trace of his lost ones. From the fact that articles of clothing have been recovered bearing names, and also that marked valises and articles of wearing apparel have come to the surface, the conclusion does not necessarily follow that the owners thereof are among the lost. I understand that Mr. MALLORY, the undertaker, has a pair of shoes in his possession belonging to a miss of apparently fifteen years of age, and, growing out of this fact, the conclusion is reached that a person of that description has perished. The Coroner, however, has not been called upon for information as to such a person, and the probability is that none such has perished. No further inquiries have been made to the Coroner in regard to the reported missing persons, Mr. KINSELLA, Station Consul at Montreal, or of Dr. LUICA, and it is therefore reasonable to suppose that they were not on the ill-fated sleeping-car, if, indeed, they were on the train at all. I have furthermore learned from head-quarters that no further inquiries for deceased friends have been made of the Coroner.

THE INQUEST.

The adjourned session of the Coroner's inquest was opened, at 2 o'clock, this afternoon, in the Court-house. Not more than a dozen spectators were present at the opening, but a few more straggled in afterward. Nearly all of these seemed to be railroad men, with one or more professional "deadheads."

STATEMENT OF A SWITCHMAN.

DAVID CARROLL, the night-watchman and switchman at the New-Hamburg Station, was first examined. His testimony contained no new facts, with the exception of the following:

There is a light at the draw-bridge; I saw that light there, until the collision destroyed it; there were two men alternately in charge of it, night and day; there was no one there then; the draw-light is only to show that the bridge is all right; until this Winter there was always a man to attend here; it would take a man only a minute to change that light; on all other Winters, in the twenty-one years I have been night-watchman there, they have had a man there; I have not known any there this Winter; MERRILL, who was on duty that night, was in the shanty at the tank, I suppose—I don't know; the same men (two) are there now, only one does not attend the draw, but the tank, to keep it from freezing.

TESTIMONY OF THE STATION AGENT.

W. B. MERRILL, the station agent, was next examined; the substance of his testimony is as follows:

In Winter it has been our duty, alternately, to see that the draw-light was lit and put out at proper time; we light it at about 4½ P. M. and put it out at 7 A. M.; according to rules I was in my proper place; the track is a down grade, but not very heavy, about two feet; I saw the express-train before the oil-train; her first signal for brakes was about three-quarter mile below where I was; there was about one hundred rods below the draw before she struck; I did not hollo; there was no use, it could not be heard; we never use a red light except for danger; we are very careful about carrying one; the oil-train had not moved; the "Pacific Express" engineer had an unobstructed view from Low Point to the draw, with the exception of the tank; we could change that light—going from the shanty to the draw, going to the draw and climbing up—in four minutes; if I had been in the shanty I could not have gone to the draw and changed that draw-light and signaled the train as soon as we did; when the engineer first saw our signal he gave one shrill whistle, another when he passed us, and another as he dashed on the bridge; I think the oil-engine whistled also; the signal-tower was partly out of order; there was no one there to attend it that night; that signal could be seen as far as Low Point; it is never used for any other purpose beside the draw; I heard the crash, saw the flame, but know no more.

STORY OF THE FIREMAN OF THE PACIFIC TRAIN.

NICHOLAS TALLY, the fireman of the engine of the Pacific train, who escaped by jumping from the engine, was next examined. He appeared with his head bandaged, and otherwise showing the effects of the catastrophe. His story was exceedingly interesting:

Our train left New-York six minutes late, 8:6; the engineer told me we were over twenty-three minutes late at Peekskill; the engine did not steam as usual; I don't know why, cold weather or bad coal, perhaps; it was very cold; kept the fires up as usual; after we leave Hamburg the engineer usually looks toward Low Point to see how the draw signal is; that night we saw from Low Point the signal of a white light, which meant "all right;" as soon as we got pretty near the tank, I saw the engineer of the down-train engine jump off his engine with a red light; I supposed they were taking water; we were running pretty lively then; I told the engineer, and he blowed "down brakes;" I guess we were going thirty five to forty miles an hour; we made our running time from Peekskill up; we then had a plenty of steam; when I saw the red light I said: "Doc, there's something wrong with that draw-bridge; the bridge is broken or the draw is up;" he says to me: "Nick, put on them patents;" I did it; I drew about three yards of bell-cord; that ought to have sprung the brakes; I pulled all I could get; then we were passing the oil-engine, just as I pulled on the patents; there is no way of telling, except that the train is checked; I couldn't feel any check; the engineer then reversed the engine and blew for brakes the second time; he blew three times, shrill, short whistles; I got down on the step and asked Doc. if he wasn't going to get off; I couldn't see nothing; I saw so many lights dropping and heard hollering; I knew something pretty bad was up; we slacked scarcely any; we were at more than half speed; we could not see the wreck; Doc. made no reply, but turned around, glanced at me, then bent his eyes ahead; I then sprung, and rolled over and shot forward on the ice; I could not command myself for a minute, but heard the crash and saw the splinters and fire fly; I saw nothing more of the engine; I think the flames burst as soon as she struck the oil; I went to the cars and heard groans and cries like the passengers burning in the midst of the flames; I believe they were roasted to death; I was close by on the track alongside the burning sleeping-car; I have put on the patent brakes before; I made up my mind that night that the brakes were not holding; there is great difficulty in making the rope worx, it catches so much; we were about twenty-five rods below the draw-signal when we first saw the red lights; I could not tell what the burning car was; I think it was on the trestle; I don't think a brakeman could go out the door and brake up in time after we blew; the rope should be put on by the brakeman; I have been fireman four years; I was with Doc. SIMMONS two months; it was a pretty clear a mile that we went after the alarm was given; it was down grade; my attention was always called to this New-Hamburg draw signal; it can be seen a long way from Low Point; it is a little down grade there from Old Trop, and from the latter place up until nearly through the tunnel; the big sleeping cars are hard to stop; it takes half a mile to stop such a train; if there had been a clear track, and steam shut off and brakes on that night, we would have run nearly to the tunnel before we could have stopped; there was another man on our engine; he was an engineer, going to look for a job in Albany; I don't know his name; Doc. SIMMONS took him on the engine-carriage; he did not have time to put him in the cars; he was a low-sized man, about forty years old, dark hair, whiskers and mustache. [Intense excitement in the Court. All the audience arose and leaned forward to hear. This proves the correctness of my previous conjecture, that a larger number than that previously given by the railroad officials and other interested parties, were lost in the dreadful calamity.]

STATEMENT OF THE ENGINEER OF THE OIL-TRAIN.

CORNELIUS ROE, the engineer of the oil train that was wrecked at New-Hamburg, known as "Extra No. 3," was next examined. He said:

A man at Greenbush examines all the wheels of all the trains at that place; we stopped at Corxeakie; I won't be positive; don't know whether the wheels were examined there; the first I knew of the accident I felt the brakes pulling behind, and then a jerk; I looked out, and saw the train separated; I saw a brakeman on top of the car; I went beyond the bridge, heard hallooing, could not hear what was said; I grabbed a red and white light and started down the last track, dropping my light and hallooing to the watchman all the time; I shut off steam; I was going about ten miles an hour; I saw the up-express just about half a mile below—where I first left my engine; I ran, I think, about two hundred feet from where my engine stood to the flagman's station; I got about forty rods below the flag-station; the express was coming at full speed; just as I got out of my engine it blew; again it blew abreast of me; again and last, just at the bridge; when it passed me, it slackened speed a little; when I came through the tunnel I was looking ahead; I told my fireman to look back; I knew nothing of the accident until I felt the jerk; I don't think a bell-cord could work on such a train; it would pull fast; there were twenty cars on my train; a brakeman in the middle of my train might possibly, not probably, have notified me by the rope; as a rule, I do not expect any signal from the conductor except by a light; I did not feel the brake before that time; we could scarcely have stopped that train with the brakes between the tunnel and the draw; these extra freight-trains, even if they number forty cars, have but three brakemen; it is the duty of the brakeman on the engine to look out for the tail-end of the train; I never saw a brakeman cross over oil-tank cars; when the train parted, it was because one of the trucks had broken loose, letting down the platform of the car, which dragged on the rails until it stopped.

At 6 o'clock P. M. the session adjourned, to meet at 7½ o'clock. A. ST. C.

ALMOST ANOTHER DISASTER.

Narrow Escape of Several Passengers From Death in a Hudson River Passenger-Car.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Feb. 10.—This evening, as the Albany-down way freight-train was coming near Barrytown, the door of an up-train freight-car swung out against the down passenger-car, crashing out four windows. Several passengers narrowly escaped instant death. Mr. C. WESLEY HALLOCK, accountant of French's Hotel, New-York, was asleep in a seat under one of the crushed windows, and escaped by being thrown to the floor.

ALBA Y.

Tweed's Croton Water Job in the Assembly—A Little Fenian Buncombe—Petroleum on Railroads—The County Clerk's Fees—The Central Underground Railroad—Sweeny vs. Carey.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Friday, Feb. 10, 1871.

TWEED'S job for getting an additional supply of Croton for New-York, which was carried through the Senate last week by a party vote, made its first appearance in the Assembly this morning. The unusual delay in bringing the bill down from the Senate has been a subject of comment among members for several days past, and meantime the "Boss" has been busy in "fixing things" so as to insure its passage through the Assembly. The first thing to be done was to get the bill referred to the Committee on Cities—a committee constructed in the interest of the Ring jobbers—and thus secure a speedy and favorable report. But it was known that two or three Democrats, among them Mr. DREW, of Putnam County, where TWEED's lakes are situated, would make an effort to have it referred to the Committee on Internal Affairs. The Republicans caucussed the bill on Tuesday evening last, and decided to oppose it as a party bill. The caucus was not fully attended, however, and, as will be seen, its decision was disregarded by several members of the party. As soon as the bill was announced in the Assembly this morning, the Speaker ordered it referred to the Committee on Cities. Mr. ALVORD immediately moved that it be referred to Internal Affairs. The Speaker declared him out of order, as it had already been referred to the other Committee. Mr. ALVORD then moved that the Committee on Cities be discharged from the consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Internal Affairs, and on this motion he called the yeas and nays. He said that the bill provided for the taking of private property in Putnam County, and therefore did not belong to the Committee on Cities, but rather to the Committee having charge of the interests of citizens living in the interior. Mr. GOODRICH supported the motion of Mr. ALVORD, and called attention to the fact that the bill had not been placed on the files of members. He said that it conferred unlimited powers upon Commissioners to take private property in any county of the State, and did not properly belong to the Committee having charge of cities. The vote on Mr. ALVORD's motion resulted in 45 yeas to 62 nays. Two Democrats only—Messrs. CHAMBERLAIN and DREW—voted to take the bill out of the Committee on Cities, while five Republicans—Messrs. BLACKALL, GIFFORD, J. W. HILL, SUNDERLIN and WOOLSEY—voted to keep it in the hands of TWEED's Committee. ELY and KILLAM were excused from voting at their own request, they being the only Republicans on the Committee on Cities. Among the Republicans who were absent or dodged the vote were, Barney, Bignall, Bolt, Graham, Greene, R. Johnson, Knapp, Littlejohn, Mulford, Pierce, Sage, Tucker and Warner. This is the most corrupt job that has thus far been introduced this Winter, and is so understood by everybody. The result indicates that TWEED and his money are omnipotent this Winter, as they were last.

BUNCOMBE.

W. D. MURPHY, of Albany, who is always on the watch for a little party buncombe, introduced a series of resolutions welcoming O'DONOVAN ROSSA and the other Irish exiles to the "land of the free and the home of the brave." Mr. LITTLEJOHN moved to amend by extending the welcome to all immigrants to this country of whatever nationality. This brought TOM FIELDS to his feet, who inflicted one of his ear-splitting harangues upon the House, to the intense agony of all his auditors who were not wholly or partially deaf. He insisted that the welcome should be extended to the Irish "victims of tyranny," and nobody else; and LITTLEJOHN, in order to prevent a further explosion of buncombe oratory, withdrew his amendment, and the resolutions were adopted without opposition, not more than one-third of the members voting at all upon the question.

PETROLEUM ON RAILROADS.

Mr. GOODRICH introduced a bill forbidding railroads from transporting petroleum oil except in wrought-iron tanks at least one-quarter of an inch thick, cylindrical in form and hermetically sealed with an iron-plate man-hole like that used in steam-boilers.

A MARKET FOR BROOKLYN.

Mr. GOODRICH introduced a bill setting apart a portion of the City Park of Brooklyn west of Raymond-street for a public market. It also provides that farmers shall be allowed the use of the market for the sale of their own products under regulations to be prescribed by the Common Council.

THE FEES OF THE NEW-YORK COUNTY CLERK'S OFFICE.

The bill to enrich the County Clerk of New-York came up on its final passage in the Senate today, when Mr. PARKER moved to strike out the section abolishing the law of 1857, which compels that official to pay the fees of his office into the County Treasury. Mr. CREAMER opposed the motion, and assured the Senators on his honor that the bill would not increase the perquisites of the Clerk more than $6,000 per annum. On the strength of this assurance, the correctness of which any New-York lawyer can estimate, the Senate passed the bill by a party vote, every Republican, except KENNEDY, voting against it.

REPORTED FAVORABLY.

Senator MURPHY's bill, introduced yesterday, to remove all disabilities from aliens with regard to holding and conveying real estate, was reported favorably and without amendment, today, from the Judiciary Committee.

THE CENTRAL UNDER-GROUND.

Mr. GENET introduced a bill to amend the charter of the Central Under-ground Railroad Company of New-York, so as to give them the right to run under Broadway on getting the consent of two-thirds of the property-owners between Morris and Fourteenth streets. The old incorporators of the Central Under-ground have all left the concern, and it is now in the hands of MELVILLE SMITH, VANDENBERGH, and others, whose "Arcade" scheme was defeated last Winter by the Governor's veto.

UP AGAIN.

PETER B. SWEENY has been up here again this week and has held daily consultations with the rising young leader of the Democratic Party, Hon. JOHN CAREY, of the Seventh District. Mr. SWEENY is said to be getting jealous of, the rapidly increasing popularity and influence of Mr. CAREY with the party, and unless he can contrive to checkmate him in some way, he will be constrained to quit the field of politics altogether, and devote himself exclusively to sheep raising in the Central Park. But it is too late to checkmate CAREY now. The Democratic Party will not be likely to abandon its new leader after sacrificing what it has for him and covering itself with infamy in order to secure him a seat in the Assembly. S.

REGULAR RECORD.

SENATE....ALBANY, Friday, Feb. 10.

The following bills were introduced:

By Mr. MORGAN—Amending the charter of Poughkeepsie.

By Mr. KENNEDY—Regulating charges for transporting freight for railroads.

By Mr. CREAMER—Contributing —— thousand dollars toward the completion of the Washington national monument.

By Mr. PIERCE—Incorporating the Metropolitan Safety Railway Company.

By Mr. GENET—Amending the act incorporating the New-York and Brooklyn Elevated Pneumatic Transportation Company. It allows the construction of an under-ground railway from Bowling Green, under Broadway, to Fourteenth-street, under Union-square to Seventeenth-street; under Broadway to its junction with the Central Park and Eighth-avenue, with a branch railway from Union-square, under Fourth-avenue to Harlem River, and across and under that river. Also, a bill to lay out a public place for a parade ground above Fifteenth-street.

By Mr. CAULDWELL—Incorporating the Manhattan Island Under-ground Communication Company, and authorizing said Company to construct a tunnel and railway in New-York City. It incorporates the Company for hundred years, with a capital of $10,000,000, the road to run from Bowling Green, under Broadway, to Union-square, and thence to Harlem River.

By Mr. MURPHY—Amending the act for the Equalization of Taxes.

By Mr. NORTON—Repealing the act allowing the Whitehall and Plattsburg Railroad Company to take increased fare and establish a ferry.

By Mr. PIERCE—Requiring the Ferry Company running boats from Bridge-street, Brooklyn, to Chambers-street, New-York, to run boats every fifteen minutes after 12 o'clock P. M.

REPORTS.

The following bills were reported:

Amending the act relative to the fees of County Treasurer; authorizing aliens to hold and convey real estate the same as citizens; providing for the immediate improvement of certain streets in New-York City.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills were passed:

Relative to the office of Clerk of the City and County of New-York; prohibiting the throwing of offal into the East River and New-York Bay.

GENERAL ORDERS.

The following bills were disposed of as noted:

Relative to new trials in criminal cases—ordered to a third reading; the Brooklyn Water act—ordered to third reading.

The Senate then went into Executive session.

NON-RESIDENT RAILROAD STOCKHOLDERS.

On the reopening of the doors, Mr. PIERCE gave notice of a bill to increase the revenues of the State by levying a tax on non-resident holders of railroad stock.

GENERAL ORDERS.

The following bills were disposed of as noted:

Providing for the completion of the Court-house in the Third Judicial District of New-York—ordered to a third reading; authorizing the Troy Cemetery Association to enlarge their cemetery—third reading; providing for the payment of Court of Appeals criers, $5 per day—third reading; the bill for the completion of the Court-house in the Ninth Judicial District of New-York being returned by the Governor, on motion of Mr. GENET, it was amended relative to the bonds to be issued, and again passed; authorizing the construction of a railroad from Auburn to Owasco Lake—third reading; to annex part of Westchester County to New-York—adversely reported; to provide for the completion of the Court-house in the Third Judicial District—passed.

Adjourned to Monday evening at 7½ o'clock.

ASSEMBLY.

THE TWEED WATER BILL.

The Senate bill providing for a further supply of water for New-York was announced and referred by the Chair to the Committee on Cities and Villages.

Mr. ALVORD moved to refer to the Committee on Internal Affairs. He maintained that the provisions of the bill were such as affected the internal affairs of Westchester and Putnam Counties, as well as those of New-York, and the Committee he named was the most appropriate.

Mr. GOODRICH sustained this proposition. The bill, he said, conferred unusual and extraordinary powers upon certain officers of New-York. He referred to the provisions of the bill which empowered action affecting the interests of other localities, as well as that of New-York.

Mr. FIELDS said it had always been usual to refer such matters to the Committee on Cities and Villages.

Mr. ALVORD's motion was lost—45 to 62, the affirmative being composed exclusively of Republicans, and the bill went to the Committee on Cities and Villages.

THE NEW CAPITOL.

The Capitol Commissioners, in reply to a resolution of the House, reported that the work on the new Capitol had been suspended only temporarily, owing to the extreme cold weather.

THE ERIE REPORT AT LAST.

The Erie Railway Company sent in a report in answer to a resolution of the House of some weeks since (by Mr. TEN EYCK), giving a detailed statement of the transportation of the past year of passengers, way and through, and of freight.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following bills were introduced:

By Mr. GOODRICH—Authorizing the use of a portion of the City Park, in Brooklyn, as a market; also, regulating the transportation of petroleum on railroads.

By Mr. JACOBS—Relative to the salary of the Overseer of the Poor of Brooklyn.

By Mr. FREAS—Regulating the manufacture and sale of salt; also, to increase the revenue of the State by increasing the duty on salt.

By Mr. LOUTREL—Relative to the income of the general fund by increasing the duty on salt.

By Mr. FLAGG—Incorporating the Troy Commercial College.

REPORTS.

The following bills were reported:

Amending the Public Education law; incorporating the Westchester Club; to prevent the spread of small-pox; providing for the appointment of an interpreter for the Justices' Courts in the Fourth and Fifth Districts of Brooklyn; the resolution requesting the Governor to return the bill relative to the completion of the New-York Ninth District Court-house for amendments; the Committee on the Governor's Message containing resolutions adopted by the Convention of Presiding Judges of the Courts of the State, reported a bill, so far as the resolutions refer, to the admission of attorneys and counselors at law practicing in all the Courts of the State; incorporating the Clermont Library Association, of the City of New-York.

THE SALT INTEREST.

Mr. LOUTREL offered a resolution calling upon the Superintendent of the Onondaga Salt Works for a detailed statement of the operations of the works since 1860. Adopted.

THE FENIAN EXILES.

Mr. MURPHY called up his resolution of welcome to the Fenian exiles.

Mr. LITTLEJOHN moved to amend by including the people of all countries coming into this country.

Mr. FIELDS opposed the amendment, on the ground that these men having been singled out by the tyranny of England, it was appropriate to give them this special welcome.

Mr. LITTLEJOHN withdrew his amendment, and the resolution was adopted.

PETROLEUM ON RAILROADS—DIVIDENDS.

Mr. RAY introduced a bill for the better protection of life and property on railroads—making regulations for the transportation of petroleum; also, as to paying indebtedness before declaring dividends.

Mr. RAY moved that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FLAGG moved its reference to the Railroad Committee, which now has the subject in hand.

Mr. RAY's motion prevailed.

Adjourned to Monday evening next at 7½ o'clock.

Music at a Death-Bed—A Last Request for a Favorite Ballad.

The Lexington (Ky.) Daily Press, of Tuesday, tells the sweet and sad story following:

"On Sunday last, as the venerable Chief-Justice ROBERTSON, stricken by the hand of death, lay almost insensible to the world which he seemed fast leaving forever, while the gigantic brain which, for so many years, has throbbed grandly to the inspirations of his genius, barely fluttered with the consciousness of life, he expressed a desire to hear Miss CARY sing the ballad of 'Old Folks at Home,' as if the strains of his favorite melody would have power to call back his soul from the portals of the grave which he was so fast nearing. The wish was at once communicated to Miss CARY, who willingly consented to do anything in her power to rouse the ebbing current of life in one who, as a statesman or jurist, has known but few rivals during the course of a long and eventful life. On reaching the residence of Judge ROBERTSON Miss CARY was at once ushered into the chamber where so much of intellect and learning was fast flickering out into the darkness of the unknown hereafter, and without accompaniment of any kind raised her rich contralto voice in the touching words, 'Way down upon the Swanee River,' but before she had sang three lines, broke down in the intensity of her emotion. Calming herself she again essayed the ballad, and, while the venerable and stricken man lay drinking her glorious melody, poured out her whole soul in the simple utterances which gave so much pleasure to one whose giant intellect had in days agone fascinated the most talented of the land. When she had ceased, Judge ROBERTSON could scarcely express his gratification by signs, yet signified a desire that Miss CARY should sing for him, 'Home, Sweet Home.' Twice did the gifted artistist attempt to comply with the request, but her emotion was too great, and, choked with feeling, she was compelled to leave the room. The whole incident was one of the most touching and affecting episodes that ever marked the death-bed of departing greatness."

Volcanic Eruption in Progress in Mexico.

The Colima correspondent of the San Francisco Daily Morning Bulletin writes to that journal:

"While our venerable volcano is settling down and has ceased to pour out its streams of lava, the little ceboruco volcano in the neighboring State of Jalisco has shown new life. Its last eruption has actually become a serious matter, as not only a volley of stones was thrown up to a larger distance than before, but even a stream of lava reached the plantations at the foot of the mountain and set them on fire, the Indian villages of Ahuacatlan and Iaba being reduced to ashes. There has been a good deal of discussion in the papers about the etymology of the word ceboruco, which some derive from the Haytian word cibar, a mountain, and others from the Aztec language; however, on pursuing B. DIAZ DEL CASTILLO's excellent work on the Mexican conquest, this contemporary and soldier of HERNAN CORTEZ, says, in describing a voyage from Cuba to Trinidad, that the vessel got between some ceborucos and was nearly wrecked. This proves that in olden times the Spaniards called ceborucos pointed rocks, and such I am told is the character of the above now active volcano."

Foreign Holders of Virginia Bonds.

The Richmond Enquirer says that a very plausible proposition is finding favor in certain quarters, looking to the payment of the interest due to the foreign bondholders at an early day, or in larger sums than to the resident holders of the securities of Virginia, and it comments upon it thus:

"It is idle to enumerate, and quite as idle to refute the reasons on which this claim is based. The ninth section of article 10 of the State Constitution prohibits such a discrimination in terms, and albeit the General Assembly has, in one or two instances, shown a surprising adroitness in evading the plain behests of that instrument, and in one notable case has utterly ignored it, there is little reason to apprehend that it will again be violated when only the interests of a public creditor are in issue."

NOTES FROM THE PEOPLE.

The Bar Association.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

As to reforms in the legal profession, no doubt the TIMES holds the same views as the Bar Association does, and works for the same ends. It is a little surprising, therefore, that this sympathy should take the form of attack in your columns this morning. And so distorted an account as is there given of the proceedings of the last meeting of the Association must have been founded on misinformation. The real work done at that meeting was this: Mr. FIELD, of his own motion, offered certain resolutions looking to the reform of practice in the matters of allowances, referee's fees, and receiverships. These resolutions, in substance, were warmly approved by the meeting, and were referred to the Committee on Law Amendment, to be digested and reported on in two weeks. Then a forty minutes' discussion was given to the subject of keeping the house open for members on Sunday, which it was decided should be done. After that the real business of the evening occupied nearly two hours, ending a little before 12 o'clock. And this was the debate over, and the settlement of the provisions contained, in the new by-law which is to regulate the disciplinary action of the Association. This discussion was earnest and general. Mr. FIELD took an active part in it, and was heard with respect, and some of his suggestions accepted as just and pertinent. The by-law, as adopted, settles a mode of procedure in case of charges made against a member of the Association, which shall be at once impartial, deliberate and effective. And the very care given to perfecting this instrument of discipline proves that it is not meant to be left unused. In its impatience with existing evils the public is disposed to expect too much of the Bar Association. Those evils have been growing for a quarter of a century, and cannot be destroyed at once. The Association, formed just a year ago, found a broad and new field of action, in which every step must be taken with care, if it is to be really a forward one. It is every month increasing by selected numbers, becoming compacted and uniform in feeling, and constantly at work through its committees to settle the best points and plans for action. Those who are opposed to its purposes of reform would be best pleased with hasty proceedings and ill-considered movements on its part. But the Association has a right to ask that the Press, which is engaged in the same work in another sphere, should explain rather than misstate its peculiar position. As to its coming up to the duty of disciplining its own members, to quote from your contemporary, the Nation, unless we mistake its purposes and the character of the men composing it, the Bar Association will neither shrink from such a responsibility at all, nor accept it when the proper time come, without such deliberate and mature proceeding as shall give its action the force of a sentence. NEW-YORK, Friday, Feb. 10, 1871.

Our Masters.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your article in today's issue on "The Real Masters of New-York," is worthy of the serious attention of our citizens.

Because a few men have been abused by a foreign Government, and in consequence thereof seek our aid and sympathy, the City magnates, even if their big hearts are overflowing with love and pity for these "involuntary emigrants," have no right to parade them through our streets to the inconvenience of travel and damage of business, if they do rule the City.

No organization should be allowed to take possession of our great thoroughfares, and interrupt the City's traffic for the greater part of a day. Every individual should be left free to act as he pleases, so long as he does not interfere with the rights of others, and so of an association of individuals; but when an association gets up a procession and monopolizes our streets, impeding travel and injuring business—assuming all the rights themselves, and leaving none to the great majority of the people—it is high time that the honest, industrious citizens should arise and assert their rights. If they have any that an Irishman is bound to respect.

No parade or procession of any kind should be allowed to come below Fourteenth-street, except on Holidays or Sundays. The streets above this line are free and open, and much more adaptable to such exhibitions than those below, and there are thousands of people up there to view them, the majority of whom are women, who especially appreciate such displays. How long are we to have these men to reign over us? JUSTITIA.

NEW-YORK, Friday, Feb. 10, 1871.

Judge Barnard.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The following notice appears in the New-York Daily Transcript of Feb. 3, 1871, under the head of "Court Notices:"

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS—SPECIAL NOTICE.

BARNARD, J.—During the February term of the Supreme Court, at Chambers, orders of arrest will not be granted unless the defendant is a non-resident, or is about to depart from the jurisdiction of the Court.

By order of the Court.

CHARLES E. LOEW, Clerk.

The Code of Procedure of the State of New-York contains the following provision of law in regard to arrest:

SEC. 179. The defendant may be arrested as hereinafter prescribed in the following cases:

1. In an action for the recovery of damages on a cause of action not arising out of contract, where the defendant is not a resident of the State, or is about to remove therefrom, or where the action is for an injury to person or character, or for injuring or for wrongfully taking, detaining or converting property.

2. In an action for a fine or penalty, or on a promise to marry, or for money received, or property embezzled or fraudulently misapplied, by a public officer or by an attorney, solicitor or counselor, or by an officer or agent of a corporation or banking association, in the course of his employment as such, or by any factor, agent, broker, or other person in a fiduciary capacity, or for any misconduct or neglect in office, or in a professional employment.

3. In an action to recover the possession of personal property unjustly detained, where the property, or any part thereof, has been concealed, removed, or disposed of so that it cannot be found or taken by the Sheriff, and with the intent that it should not be so found or taken, or with the intent to deprive the plaintiff of the benefit thereof.

4. When the defendant has been guilty of a fraud in contracting the debt or incurring the obligation for which the action is brought, or in concealing or disposing of the property for the taking, detention, or conversion of which the action is brought, or when the action is brought to recover damages for fraud or deceit.

5. When the defendant has removed or disposed of his property, or is about to do so, with intent to defraud his creditors.

It will be seen at a glance that the law of the State of New-York grants the remedy of arresting a defendant to suitors in many cases not apparently embraced within the terms of Mr. Justice BARNARD's notice above quoted.

As this is a matter of considerable importance to suitors in the Supreme Court, and of some interest to the legal profession, will Mr. Justice BARNARD be good enough to explain on what principle or by what authority this somewhat extraordinary notice is given? AN INQUIRER.

NEW-YORK, Friday, Feb. 10, 1871.

Is there any Limit to Tammany Usurpation?

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In a country theoretically free and self-governed, where the people are conceded to be the source of all power, what amount of partisan tyranny and official robbery may they be expected passively to endure? What additional number of election frauds, what further amount of gross briberies, how many more Star-chamber Court-house jobs, Twombly outrages, and other indignities will they be required to submit to, from the corrupt and dangerous men who dominate our politics, plunder our tax-payers, and threaten to extinguish what is left of our liberties?

As the NEW-YORK TIMES has bravely and successfully planted itself between the people and these enemies of their rights, will it not edify them with some further light on these inquiries?

Must there not be a line drawn somewhere beyond which the usurpation of demagogues may not pass? If not, we are clearly reduced to the humiliating confession that the supremacy of the people has passed away, and that there is no longer any protection against the organized rapacity of political bandits, nor any assignable limit to the insane despotism of a corrupt party frenzied with a sense of power.

It is perfectly plain that, the purpose of the Tweed oligarchy in throwing out Mr. TWOMBLY, is to make sure of the majority needed at Albany for carrying out their legislative programme. Having decided that certain ends must, at all hazards, be accomplished, they go straight to the work, utterly unscrupulous as to the means employed, and reckless as to the consequences. Whenever, in their frantic career, more power is needed, they have only to seize it, and the desired result is assured.

Now, if the voters of an Assembly District may be virtually disfranchised by a deliberate and premeditated act of party tyranny, it establishes the fact, repeatedly proved before, that there is absolutely no end to the seizure of power by the dictators of Tammany, and no guarantee left to the people against the invasion of their original and inherent rights. How is it possible not to perceive that the same despots who virtually extinguish the ballot in any one district of the State, are sure to repeat the tyranny in others, whenever it suits their purpose? How is it possible for any one of our half-million voters not to realize that the faction which calls itself the Democratic Party has already, by a series of glaring usurpations, stamped out self-government in the Empire State, and reared its own supremacy over the prostrate sovereignty of the people?

Is not the situation, then, at once critical and startling, and does it not raise the serious inquiry, whether the time is not near at hand when the continued submission of the people will become impossible? One thing is certain—the State of New-York is no longer a republic. To call it so is simple irony, and does not help the case. The problem of our deliverance is indeed one of national importance, and cannot long remained unsolved. Is there not, Sir, in your opinion, some remedy equal to the emergency? Is there not some course of action, at once definite and efficient, by which the people may yet recover their plundered rights and their departed power? CONRAD WILSON.

Public Education.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The notice taken of a former communication of mine by two or three correspondents induces me to trouble you further with another, and leads me to hope that a subject of such vital, pressing importance does command public attention. It is certainly remarkable to what extent the question of education is being agitated; it is in fact la question du jour. For about thirty years we have had established a system of free schools, munificently endowed, the pride and hope of our citizens; and though the expenses be great, yet none are more cheerfully borne. The very fact, however, of this liberal provision constitutes not a small danger to the schools, for it is too frequently the case that when money is liberally granted for the support of any institution, that its efficiency and benefits are estimated too often by the magnitude of the endowment, and people complacently assure themselves that all is well because they tax themselves liberally to support it. Here, I assert, is our great danger. School-rooms have been built, school-books provided, and methods of instruction improvised; and it has been taken for granted that the machinery of education would work itself, as if there had been a living spirit in its wheels.

There is too much cause to fear that the same political bias and traffic which enter into every one of our institutions may soon control and permeate our public school system, and check its efficiency; and greater cause to fear that their interests and regulation may fall into hands, whose ideas of teaching "the young idea how to shoot" are as expanded and intelligent as their instincts are pure and exalted. I cannot take up your space with any extended remarks, but will endeavor succinctly to direct attention to three points:

1. TEACHERS.—Are they carefully trained for their positions? Are they appointed after due examination and inquiry as to their reputations? Are they sure that ability and faithfulness will insure consideration and promotion?

It is utterly impossible to expect results from any educational system where teachers have not careful preliminary training, and where they stand in danger that some political grudge or personal pique may jeopardize their position and prospects. Strict rules for the appointment and removal of teachers should be laid down; it should be a sine qua non that they have some experience or training in a normal school for their work. In the systems of Prussia and Holland, their first care is for the education of the teacher, who has a strict apprenticeship to go through for his work; he is made to feel that it is a profession; he is provided in Holland with a pension at the age of sixty, of two-thirds of his salary. Something must be wrong in our system that represses the individuality of the teacher. He is a mere signal-man of a system. If he is a person of culture and ability as a teacher, he is cramped by a groove into which he has got to run. He has to produce certain results, to drill his class to a fixed standard, and less than that he fails. Is it not strange that out of the two thousand and more teachers in this City we have so little interchange of thought, experience or suggestion? One would imagine that a body of this number would have periodical public meetings for discussion, for arousing interest in their work, for aiding one another by suggestion and experience, and giving to the public, through the Press, enlightened views on matters of education.

2. STUDIES.—Can we not afford to have any more liberal instruction in our schools than the three R's? We should have strict attention paid to natural science. I think in every school there should be philosophical apparatus, and the principal or some teacher of the school required once a week or so to give instructive, simple lectures on physics. In a country such as ours, with its large physical resources, a little acquaintance with physical laws is highly desirable. In the curriculum of the schools, natural history should occupy a prominent place, and its study be made obligatory.

3. DISCIPLINE.—In a large City, with its varied population and its numbers of neglected youth under very bad home influence or none at all, there is no more momentous question than this. It is intimately connected with our social order and well being. Discipline is to education what the track is to the locomotive, what the scaffolding is to the edifice. It is not a question of mere order and attention in the schools, but rather whether a number of incorrigible pupils are to have any education at all; for if expulsion be the punishment for extreme viciousness or incorrigibility, the education of the expelled is lost, and in this way the ranks of the ignorant are increased, and besides, in many cases this is the very end the pupil desires for his conduct. As the sentiment of the time and the regulations of the schools are against corporal punishment, we must devise some effective check, something that will be an adequate deterrent to vicious pupils, and save teachers from the harassing vexation they suffer from this class. It is useless to hand them over to parental correction; that they have not, or despise. For this class I would have a law empowering a School Board, on due examination and proof, to detain a pupil in solitary confinement from his home for a short time. If the parental control is sufficient to make him submissive to the school discipline, no necessity then for this process; but where there is a total neglect or inability of home influence, as it is the duty of society to supply the parental authority, and protect both the pupil and itself from the consequences of his vicious conduct. PROPHET.

The Late Accident.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In reference to the late accident on the Hudson River Road, there is one specific preventive for a car's "jumping the track," and as far as I know, but one. It consists in placing two buffers at each end of the cars, one on each side, with the coupling in the middle. This coupling is taken up perfectly tight, so that the buffers on the front end of one car are brought into close contact with those on the rear end of the one in front of it. By this means the whole train is made rigid, and no one car can possibly leave the track. This two-buffer system, with central coupling, is the best method of securing rigidity, but even our American single-buffer connection could be made much safer than it now is, by tight coupling.

The reason why cars are not coupled in this manner is that it increases considerably the draft of the train, particularly on curves, and on portions of the track where the rails are not in true alignment. ST. ETIENNE.

Street Crossings.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Is it not a part of the duty of the street-cleaning contractors to keep the cross-walks clear of snow and ice? It certainly should be somebody's duty, for the condition of those walks at present, and during the past ten days, is and has been simply a disgrace to the City. We daily see people falling by reason of the slippery ridges of ice which appear opposite almost every corner. Some official fledgling is constantly notifying us to clear our sidewalks and gutters, which is all very proper. Should he not also see to the cross-walks? A SUFFERER.

How a Dog Saved a Man's Life.

A pleasant little story, of which the hero is a well-trained setter-dog, comes from Quincy, Ill., and the Whig of that city tells it as follows:

"The dog usually sleeps at night in a kennel in the rear of the house. On Thursday night last, about 10 o'clock, as his owner went to his room in the second story on the front side of the building, (the lights below being extinguished,) he heard his dog come beneath the window, and set up a most earnest constant barking, and it seemed to him that there was an unusual tone in the animal's voice. Supposing that there were intruders on the premises, he opened the window and called out to "Nig" to "catch 'em." The dog, instead of starting off under the office, continued to bark, jumping up against the wall of the house beneath the window, evidently desiring that his master should come down. The gentleman went down, and as soon as he reached the outer door was met by the dog, who, still barking, ran toward the rear of the dwelling. His master following, found his hired man lying on the ground, helpless and unconscious. He had, as he afterward stated, stepping out from the kitchen, fallen upon the ice, his head striking a stone step and cutting a fearful gash in his scalp. He had to be carried into the house, and it was some hours before he recovered his senses; in fact, he is still suffering from the effects of the wounds."

PERSONAL, POLITICAL, AND GENERAL.

The Maiden's Prayer—an engagement ring.

An Episcopal lady in Philadelphia has given a costly communion service to the West Philadelphia Presbyterian Church.

That remarkably pleasant and attractive depot in New-Haven is visited by six or seven thousand railroad travelers every day.

Gen. A. L. LONG, late of the Confederate Army, is very ill at his home in Bedford, Va., and can scarcely recover.

The Pennsylvania Institute for the Deaf and Dumb celebrated its fiftieth anniversary on Wednesday. Over 300 deaf mutes were present.

The members of the Bar of Kentucky are, almost unanimously, in favor of the admission of negro testimony.

Hon. WILLIAM H. BARNUM has been renominated for election to Congress by the Democrats of the Fourth District of Connecticut.

Three thousand Baltimoreans make boots and shoes for the wholesale trade, and last year they turned out $4,000,000 worth.

A resident of Connecticut boasts that for eighty-four consecutive years he has eaten his Thanksgiving dinner in the same house.

The Andrew statue will be unvailed in Boston on Tuesday morning next. Hon. WILLIAM GRAY will present it to the State, and Gov. CLAFLIN will respond.

A bill is before the Legislature of Wisconsin authorizing the admission of both a husband and his wife as witnesses in all cases wherein they are interested parties.

A Texas paper reports that since September last 119,000 people, with 1,664 wagons, have emigrated from Tennessee and Georgia into the Lone Star State.

The failure of CHARLES A. SINDALL, a prominent cotton-buyer of Macon, Ga., is reported, but his assets will cover a large portion of his liabilities.

It is insisted, in Ohio, that VALLANDIGHAM's friends will press him as the Democratic candidate for United States Senator, next Winter.

Subscriptions for the proposed Museum of Fine Arts in Boston are to be taken for any amount, from $1 upward. A committee has been appointed to make arrangements for soliciting subscriptions in Europe.

Troy merchants complain that their correspondents in this City failed to receive remittances sent to them in the mail from that city on the 19th of January, and that inquiry has failed to elicit any information in regard to the manner of their disappearance.

The Republican State Central Committee of New-Hampshire has issued its usual annual address, setting forth the importance of the coming election, and calling for a full vote, that the party may triumphantly win their twenty-first consecutive victory.

The Boston Times expects the New-Yorkers to beat the citizens of the Hub in the race for free markets, but it finds consolation in the thought that we shall give the Boston City Government opportunity to spend a few thousand dollars now and then in sending committees to see how they work.

The planters in Louisiana and Mississippi are reported to be actively making arrangements to secure white laborers for the next crop, and the supply fails to meet the demand. The demand for white servant-girls in these States is also very great, and good ones are paid from $20 to $25 a month.

Chief-Justice BELLOWS, of New-Hampshire, in opening Court, recently, condemned in very decided terms the various illegal means used to swindle people at church fairs, and said that as they were indictable offenses, the officers failed to do their duty when they suffered them to pass unnoticed.

The case of Rulloff vs. The People—on application of the counsel of EDWARD H. RULLOFF, to the General Term of the Supreme Court, at Albany, for a new trial—came before the Court on Wednesday, and on application of his counsel, its consideration was postponed to Wednesday next.

A committee of three physicians, appointed by the San Francisco Medical Society at the request of many parents and tax-payers, have visited the principal public schools, and have been convinced that the course of study is too severe and trying and the amount of exercise allowed too little for the health of the pupils.

Among the lodgers at the Station-house in Alexandria, Va., on Sunday night, was a young and beautiful woman, apparently well-educated, who stated that she was in pursuit of her husband, who had deserted her in New-York, carrying off with him all her jewelry, and leaving her without one cent. She had managed to trace him as far South as that city, where all evidence of him was lost.

A San Francisco paper gives a report that certain Democratic politicians have laid a nice scheme to defeat the renomination of Gov. HAIGHT. The northern portion of the State is to be "put up" for Congressman JOHNSON, and San Francisco, with what else can be secured, for Ex-Mayor MCCOPPIN. Compromise then is to give the former the nomination for Governor, and the latter for Lieutenant-Governor.

One former student at Phillips Exeter Academy, who was asked to contribute to the fund to replace the building recently burned, remarked that his academical career was marked by three suspensions, and was finally ended by his being expelled. After debate it was agreed that $25 for each punishment was cheap enough, and $100 was added to the building fund.

BRET HARTE was to leave San Francisco on the 2d inst., to take up his residence permanently in the East. The papers speak regretfully of his departure, and the Alta says, that during his long residence in California he has established, not only a brilliant reputation as a literary man, but more enduring and hearty friendship than most men gain in his department of life.

The excitement in York, S. C., which threatened to lead to a serious outbreak, has been ended by the action of Gen. C. L. ANDERSON, commanding the State Militia. He ordered that the arms furnished to the negro military company should be returned to the Sheriff. It is said the officers of the company suggested this course, to promote the public welfare by securing the preservation of peace.

Gen. C. H. MORGAN, who has lately been placed in command of the United States troops at Raleigh, N. C., has been investigating the Robeson County troubles, and, the papers of that State say, is of the opinion that the citizens can, by united, determined, and organized action, rid themselves of the gang of outlaws committing outrages there. Such action, he thinks, they should take at once, and he promises that the troops shall give assistance when called upon by the civil authorities.

The Kennebec Journal calls upon the shipbuilders of Maine to realize the fact that very little of the material now used is obtained within the limits of the State, and that they have almost nothing to put into wooden vessels even, except labor and capital. As a leading interest, it continues, the day of ship-building is past, and the people of Maine should turn their attention to agriculture and manufactures, the two great resources upon which the State is ultimately to rely for prosperity.

The Boston Journal tells this: Mr. BENJAMIN E. BATES, President of the Bank of Commerce, who had been summoned as a witness in the Superior Court, failing to appear, a capias was issued and placed in the hands of a constable, who brought him into Court Friday morning, and while on the way down, consenting to go at all, was imposed. Upon hearing the sentence Mr. BATES exclaimed: "That's right, Judge," and, drawing his pocket-book, was about to pass the dollars to his Honor, when his attention was directed to the Sheriff as the proper person to receive the cash.

A clergyman in Maine, who proposed to devote a portion of his time to labors in the town of Brooks, applied to the railroad company for a pass, and received a reply from the President of the road to the following effect: "This company is disposed to lend all possible aid toward the advancement of the Gospel. It recognizes specially the need of regenerating influences and a change of heart in the field of your proposed labors at Brooks, which town has repudiated its subscription to this road. With the hope that your prayers and exhortations may be efficacious to that end, I inclose the pass asked for."

THE WEST POINT TROUBLES.

Incidents of Gen. Upton's Academical Career—Reminiscences by Gen. Kilpatrick—The Latter's Views of the Present Difficulties.

From the Erie (Penn.) Dispatch, Feb. 9.

Sitting beside Gen. KILPATRICK at breakfast, yesterday morning, the great cavalry leader referred to the West Point imbroglio in very nearly the following words: "I have been reading the editorial in this morning's Dispatch on 'West Point and its Scandals,' and, had the editors known Gen. UPTON as well as I do, I don't think they would charge him with pusillanimity. I entered the Academy with UPTON in the Summer of '57, was his familiar associate until our graduation, and have known him intimately since. Indeed, no one can know him more thoroughly than I. His prominent characteristic is the readiness with which he assumes a responsibility. He never shirks an unpleasant duty, however disagreeable, and there isn't a single grain of the truckling element in his constitution. To give you a better idea of the man, I will narrate a few facts from our class history. In all educational institutions of any considerable age and prominence, there are customs and laws established by the students, and handed down from class to class, more rigorous in their action than any restraints imposed by faculties or commandants. Among these self-imposed regulations, at the 'Point,' was one which forbade the discussion of politics. The violation of this regulation was met with that severest of punishments, social ostracism. UPTON, who hailed from an abolition district in Western New-York, refused to subscribe to the almost universal sentiment of the class, and persisted in giving utterance to his anti-slavery opinions upon all occasions. As a consequence, he was 'cut' by the entire class, with the exception of three, and the petty insults heaped upon him were of the most annoying description. There are very few men who would have dared to express their sentiments under such aggravating circumstances. But UPTON was as brave as a lion, and spoke his mind fearlessly on all questions. I will give you an instance of his personal bravery. A cadet named GIBBS, from South Carolina, had made some disparaging remarks concerning UPTON, which, coming to his ears, he resolved to resent. One noon, as we were drawn up preparatory to marching to the mess-room, UPTON stepped out from his position on the right of the battal

THE LIBERAL CLUB.

Francis Gerry Fairfield on Positivism and Prof. Huxley.

The rooms of the Liberal Club, Plimpton Building, on Stuyvesant-street, were pretty well filled last evening; the order of the evening being the reading of a paper, by Mr. F. G. FAIRFIELD, on, "The Points of Contact between Auguste Comte and the New Philosophy," (so called) as interpreted by HUXLEY, SPENCER and TYNDALL. Having been introduced by the President, Mr. FAIRFIELD commenced by reviewing Prof. HUXLEY'S paper on the "Scientific Aspects of Positivism," constituting a portion of his recent volume of "Lay Sermons." The lecturer took exception to HUXLEY'S position in relation to COMTE'S law of the three stages Not that he argued with the latter in the position that all thought had begun in the fictional stage, progressing through the metaphysical to the scientific. He coincided with HUXLEY in the assertion that physics, metaphysics and theology had coexisted through the whole history of speculation, but did not think the Professor had proved it. The analogy between historical progress and personal progress, from infancy or boyhood to manhood, was a misleading analogy, and could not be relied upon as demonstrating anything. Criticism must settle the question by reference to fact, not by reference as supposed subjective experience. The oldest systems were no doubt religious systems—systems of mythology, not systems of philosophy. The Avesta, the sacred books of the Hindoos, the Eddas of the ancient Gothic, as well as the Semitic books, must be regarded as religious rather than theological even. So with the Greeks. An older mythology embalmed in the works of HOMER, had preceded all philosophical speculation. The oldest schools of speculation were the Ionic, Italic and Pythagorean—Greek, all of them. The first was strictly metaphysical, and had anticipated by nearly three thousand years the leading propositions of HEGEL. The second was purely materialistic, concerning itself with the hyle, or physical matter of the universe. The third was the prototype of modern scientific speculation, and embodied the leading postulates of the modern molecular theorists. Sir WILLIAM THOMPSON'S atomic theory had been anticipated by PYTHAGORAS, and Prof. HUXLEY'S protoplasmic hypothesis was neither more nor less than a scientific academy of that school had come down through BUFFON as the hypothesis that all organisms were composed of living molecules. HUXLEY'S main idea, that vitality was simply a quality of matter of a certain molecular constitution, had also been substantially anticipated by BUFFON, whose theory of living molecules was traceable to the Greek thinkers. The difference was that modern scientific investigation had been impressed into service to prove that which to the Greeks was not demonstrable. He did not see, therefore, that the new philosophy could lay claim to originality in its main propositions—except, perhaps, in the idea that mind was a mode of molecular motion, which was open to fatal criticism. It must be remembered, too, that the foundation for this had been laid by HARTLEY in his vibratory hypothesis; and he could not see that SPENCER in his latest productions had materially improved upon the views of his eminent predecessor. Numerous theories of mind had been entertained. There had once been an old German, who referred all mental operations to the presence of phosphoric acid in the brain; but his Ohne Phosphor Kein Gedanke had been preserved only as proof of how stupid a downright materialist can be without extra effort. In the days of the mesmeric sensation, a notion that mind was nothing but electricity had had its run. But that had been exploded by HELMHOLTZ; and now science had adopted a molecular theory. What next? If mind was matter, then matter was mind; and the old pantheism of the world-soul had only been resurrected in the new pantheism of molecular activity. After all, what did these speculations amount to? Sir WILLIAM THOMSON could even prove that an atom was a ponderable body; and Prof. TYNDALL had quoted M. MORREN'S experiment to prove that a body consisting of many atoms of sulphur was imponderable to the extent of eluding the most powerful microscopic instrument. If so, then there was a field of molecular motion quite out of sight of science—a region of the unconditioned, to use Sir WILLIAM HAMILTON'S phrase, upon which scientists might speculate, but to which the method of observation could not be applied. So matter as well as mind had its region of the unknowable and the unknown; and it was not worth the while to be too positive in one's conclusions. All dogmatism was out of place, for the materialist of the present day could no more tell what matter was than the ancient Ionic could define his hypothetical Hyle. The lecturer then proceeded to a criticism of the subjective basis of positivism and the new philosophy. He did not see that the objective method had settled anything as to the validity of impressions. It had only, through HUME, confessed its inability to settle questions of that sort; and mind in could demonstrate its own subjective basis, the term positive, as applied to its conclusions, was a misnomer.

Considerable discussion ensued, after which the Club adjourned.

Relief for France—Contributions Beginning In.

The subscriptions for the relief of the sufferers in France are coming in rapidly, though from the fact that the books are in the hands of so many persons who are actively engaged in presenting the appeal to our citizens, the returns are not in such a shape that they can now be given to the public. This afternoon a list will be made up for publication showing the entire amounts received to date. The Executive Committee, Messrs. MARSHALL, LANIER and STOKES, are devoting a large proportion of their valuable time to this business, and are energetically pushing it forward. The following communication was addressed to the Chairman of the Produce Exchange Committee:

NO. 30 MOORE-STREET, NEW-YORK, Feb. 8.

I beg leave to offer, for the free use of your Committee, free of charge, any or all of the following stores, to be used for the receipt and storage of produce given for the relief of the suffering inhabitants of France: No. 56 Pearl-street, Nos. 29 and 31 Water-street, Nos. 20 and 22 Moore-street.

WILLIAM M. PATTERSON.

The Committee now have money with which to buy grain and provisions, places in which to store them, and lighters and elevators with which to put the provisions on board vessels. The following letter shows how the Shakers of New-Lebanon feel about the sufferers in France:

LEBANON, Feb. 8.

FRIEND CHARLES LANIER: Seeing by accounts in various papers that there is an effort being made by the citizens of the United States to relieve the sufferings of the poor starving people of France, we have concluded to contribute our mite to the good Christian cause. We have at Chatham Four Corners, New-York, fifty barrels of fine, prime extra flour, subject to your order. Please give us full shipping directions, and we forward immediately. Very truly, your friends,

E. FOWLER and
BENJAMIN GATES,
Trustees Society of Shakers, Lebanon, N. Y.

The Cotton Exchange to be Removed.

The question of the removal of the Cotton Exchange from its present temporary and narrow quarters to a more suitable permanent location was favorably put to the vote of the actual members of the Exchange, yesterday. The total number of members is 209. Of this number, fifteen were absent, from various causes. Of the members in attendance, 137 subscribed their names to a printed form of agreement in favor of, and thirty-eight to a similar form of agreement against, the removal. The question was therefore regarded as having been decided affirmatively and in favor of removing to the Hanover Buildings, which property, together with the adjoining stores, Nos. 101 and 103 Pearl-street, and No. 64 Stone-street, had been offered to the Association at a sum not to exceed $100,000. The entire property thus offered embraces the brown-stone structure known as the Hanover Buildings, having a front of about 73½ feet on Hanover-square. The Pearl-street front of the whole property offered is about 64 feet, and the Stone-street front about 77 feet. The rear boundary line extends to some 75 to 80 feet between Pearl and Stone streets. Application is to be promptly made to the State Legislature for an act of incorporation, to include the usual right to hold the real estate in the name of the Association. The present purpose of the management is to complete the purchase at once, and proceed with the necessary alterations as soon as they get possession.

Sabbath Evening Services for the People.

It has been known for some time that the hall of the Cooper Union has been open every Sabbath evening for popular religious services. Every effort has been made to attract to these meetings the great multitude who have no home in the sanctuary, and who are drifting about aimlessly on the Sabbath, or wasting sacred time in mere animal indulgence and sloth. These meetings are conducted on a catholic, unsectarian basis, entirely distinct from all denominational connection, and are simply designed to make known the plain, practical truths of our common Christianity. It will be seen from the notice in another column that Rev. Dr. JOHN HALL is expected to conduct the services to-morrow evening, and it is hoped that a large audience will be present.

Murderous Assault on a Police Sergeant —Old Spice of the Young Democracy.

On Thursday evening, (as already reported in the TIMES,) as Sergt. CONNOLLY, of the Twenty-first Precinct, was walking down Third-avenue, he met a friend, with whom he, not being on duty, went into a liquor-store to take a drink. In the saloon were half a dozen prominent members of the Young Democracy of the Twenty-first Ward, who hold the Sergeant in special dislike since the last election, on account of his alleged opposition to their party in that Ward. One of them, JOHN MARTIN, shoved up against the Sergeant, who told him to keep away. Another of the party, JOSEPH HYSLIP, slapped the Sergeant in the face with his fist. A third rowdy, named THOMAS KIERNAN, then put his foot behind the constable and tripped him. While lying prostrate on the ground, the three beat and kicked him savagely. The Sergeant was so badly abused by the ruffians that he is confined to bed in a dangerous condition. His assailants were arrested yesterday morning, and were committed to answer, by Justice BIXBY, in the Yorkville Police Court.

EXEUNT EXILES.

The Irish Refugees Leave Sweeny's To-day and Retire to Private Life.

The exiles rested yesterday after their labors of the previous day, and Sweeny's Hotel was to all intents and purposes dull, in comparison to what it has been. In the afternoon, however, the arrival of another of the "released," PAGAN O'LEARY, revived the drooping spirits of the "hangers-on." He came in the Algeria, and had a never-failing fund of anecdote connected with his prison experience to relate. He had ample opportunities and many willing auditors, and was the admired centre of many an open-mouthed, attentive group in the lobbies, parlors and barrooms. He is, however, a little behind time, and is not regarded as much of a "lion." Besides him, a few private visitors made up the total of interest for the Fenians yesterday.

Today will be occupied by the exiles in answering the few addresses remaining unanswered, and in bidding adieu to the New-York public as its guests, for to-night most of them will leave the hotel and go to their future residences as private citizens. But this is not to be altogether the last of them. They reassemble again on Wednesday, to be present at the Brooklyn demonstration, which will probably be the last of them so far as the New-Yorkers are concerned. In the mean while the Irish at Dobb's Ferry tender a reception to Capt. MCCLURE and any of the others wishing to be further "received." It will take place on Monday next.

Police Offenders.

There were forty complaints against policemen, listened to by Commissioner MANIERRE yesterday. Patrolmen EDWARD ARMSTRONG and JOHN MCGUCKIN, of the Second Precinct, were charged by JAMES R. DAVIS with refusing to arrest a drunken porter, named JOHN DUNN, who had knocked the complainant down in the Post-office, where the latter in employed. DAVIS was attempting to eject DUNN at the time. Referred to the Board.

Detectives DANIEL J. FEGAN and MATTHEW MCSHENY, of the Thirteenth Precinct, while on reserve duty, lowered themselves, by means of a knotted rope, from a second-story window of the Station-house, and were absent for two hours. Commissioner MANIERRE emphatically expressed his opinion of this Jack Sheppard style of exit and referred the case to the Board. The other cases possessed no interest.

Lawyer Jones' Undying Fame—Scene Before Recorder Hackett.

During a lull in the proceedings, at the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, Lawyer JONES, otherwise Johannes, made the following remarks:

Whereas, some evil-disposed, malicious persons read an affidavit in this Court, some time ago, tending to blight my spotless reputation in the eyes of my fellow-citizens regarding my conduct in "the Nathan mystery," I beg leave of your Honor that I may be permitted to file my affidavit in contradiction of the whole base calumny, so that future generations yet unborn may look with eyes of the deepest gratitude toward one who, with his great intellectual attainments, and at his own expense, tried to benefit humanity. In the future history of this great American country my undying fame will—

RECORDER (interrupting)—Oh, that will do. Go and file your affidavit whenever you please.

The "Count," feeling snuffed out, said: "Thank your Honor," and bustled out of Court.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS—FEB. 10.

Before Judge Brady.

A SALOON-KEEPER IN CONTEMPT.

Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents in the City of New-York vs. Albert Dyers.—Under a statute to that effect, the plaintiff instituted proceedings to recover a fine against the defendant for keeping a saloon in the Bowery without license, at the same time obtaining an injunction prohibiting him from doing business until a license was obtained. The defendant disregarded the injunction, and on a motion to punish him for contempt, Judge BRADY has rendered a decision as follows:

The defendant has been guilty of contumacious conduct in violating the injunction, but he seems to have been acting under the advice of counsel, whose given under erroneous impressions of the law. This, I understand, to be his excuse—the erroneous impressions of the counsel—is my conclusion. Without discussing the merits of this excuse, and not intending to regard it as a precedent for future cases, I think it a proper exercise of discretion in this case, under the circumstances, to impose as a fine the sum of $25, to be paid to the plaintiffs' attorneys within ten days, and with the condition added that the defendant desist upon the settlement of the order herein, from disobedience to the injunction which he has violated.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART II.—FEB. 10.

Before Judge Brady and a Jury.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Samuel N. Pike vs. Benjamin F Vosburg—This action was brought to recover the amount due upon a lease as rent, for the payment of which the defendant became surety. It was claimed on behalf of defendant that the lessee did not occupy the premises, and that the agent, James R. Edwards, had sub-let the premises for a less sum, and had agreed to discharge the defendant on his agreement to pay the difference in the rent, the second renting being for a less sum, and that he had paid this difference. The plaintiff had made certain repairs upon the premises for the sub-tenant, and it was claimed that this act was one of recognition of tenancy. It further appeared that the original lessee had collected rent of the second tenant, tending to show that the relation of landlord and tenant continued to exist between him and the plaintiff, and that the surety was not discharged. The jury rendered a verdict for plaintiff for the full amount claimed, $795 30.

Brown & Estes for plaintiff; E. A. Hulet for defendant.

CITY COURT OF BROOKLYN—FEB. 10.

Before Judge McCue and a Jury.

ALLEGED FRAUDULENT ASSIGNMENT.

Isabella Gill vs. John McNamee, Sheriff, et al.—This action, which has been on trial for several days, resulted in a verdict for the defendants. The plaintiff sued to recover $25,000, the value of a stock of dry-goods seized by the Sheriff under warrants of attachment issued in favor of Haggerty & Co., J. B. Spellman & Sons, and several other prominent firms in this City, to satisfy claims against one Andrew W. Gall, claiming that a sale of the goods effected by him to the plaintiff was fraudulent and void as against his creditors. It appeared that the vendor, while insolvent and owing $173,000, with but $40,000 in assets with which to pay his debts, made the sale to the plaintiff, the wife of his managing clerk, Thomas Gill, upon a credit, taking her notes in payment, which the vender afterwards turned over to a Mrs. Powers in part satisfaction of an alleged indebtedness to her. That the plaintiff was irresponsible when she purchased, and Mrs. Powers was a relative, whose husband had been engaged in his life-time in oil speculations with Andrew N. Gill. That this sale was followed by a general assignment of a stock of goods in New-York to one Brett, a clerk of the assignor, who, with others, was preferred for more than the entire assets would pay, and that this assignment had been set aside as fraudulent by the Courts in New-York, before Judge BRADY, and one of the charges of fraud was the fraudulent sale in question.

Brown & Estes for the defendants; Homer Nelson for plaintiff.

FRIDAY, Feb. 10—P. M.

The Public Funds are advancing rapidly today, both in prices and in demand. The news of the Joint High Commission between England and our Government on the Alabama claims, and other pending differences, has a very happy and significant influence upon our Funds, in connection with the new 5 ₱ cent. Loan offered from the Treasury in exchange for the 6 ₱ cent. 5-20 years Bonds. Another cause of the demand is the cheapness of Money. The surplus Money balances unemployed in Wall-street, and which are daily increasing in amount, naturally seek the very best class of Stocks, in point of security, and as there is really nothing so unqualifiedly safe as Government credits, the effect is first seen in the active inquiry for 5-20s, 10-40s, the long 6 ₱ cents of 1881, and the Currency 6 ₱ cents. The last-named sold up to 112¾ and accrued Interest since January. The Coupon 10-40 years 5 ₱ cent. Bonds sold as high as 110¼ ₱ cent. They are scarce in the market, and as there is understood to be a short interest to the amount of $600,000 or $800 000, the Bonds are not here to close up these contracts, although they might possibly be brought home from Europe to some profit, if time were allowed to make the importation. We hear of no attempt to "corner" the Bonds, but the course recently of the demand and supply seems to have brought about an involuntary scarcity, to the confusion of parties who have borrowed Bonds to be returned on call. The 5-20s of 1867 are also in large demand, and the price advanced to 110@110¼ ₱ cent. The other 5-20s were all firm, and the tendency of the whole list is to higher prices.

The sales of Gold are ¼@¼ ₱ cent. stiffer than yesterday, 111⅛@111⅜ ₱ cent., and the Foreign Exchanges are also firm on the basis of 109¾ ₱ cent. for sixty days London, Money is lending at from 4 to 6 ₱ cent on call loan to the brokers. The offerings from lenders at these cheap rates are more than equal to the demand.

The Railway market has strongly sympathized with the activity and advance in the Public Funds today, and we have to report an increased business, at better prices than yesterday and the day before. The Bonds of the established Roads, equally with their Stocks, have improved in activity, the Central Pacifics Gold 6 ₱ cent. taking the lead at 93¼@93½ ₱ cent., followed by the 7 ₱ cent. Mortgages, in lawful currency, of the Western Roads. The Certificates of the New-York Central advanced to 90½@90¾ ₱ cent.; the Stock to 94½@94¾ ₱ cent. The Lake Shore Stock, Ohio and Mississippi, the North-Weste, Rock Island and other Western Roads were firmer and higher, while the Miscellaneous Shares advanced on Canton, Quicksilver, the Express lines, Western Telegraph, &c. The Adams Express Company have advertised to pay a Quarterly Dividend of $2 per share, March 1.

In the Afternoon, the business in the Public Stocks and in Railway Stocks and Bonds was quite active, especially in the Public Funds, for which the demand was large for all descriptions. There was a fair amount of business in the Southern States Bonds without change in prices from yesterday, except in the North Carolinas, which for a day or two past have been looking up, on a speculative movement, said to have been recently organized in the Street, to put the Bonds of the State up. The long 6 ₱ cents of the United States, which cannot be redeemed until after the year 1881, advanced to 114¾ ₱ cent., which price, exclusive of accrued interest since January 1, is equal to 102@102¼ ₱ cent. in Gold. The 5-20s of 1867 are selling at the equivalent of 98 ₱ cent. in Gold, and the 5 ₱ cents 10-40s at the equivalent of 96 ₱ cent. Gold.

In the Foreign Exchanges a leading house is drawing 60 days London at 109¾ ₱ cent., and the Bill Brokers report this as the minimum rate for first-class Bills.

After the late Boards, the following quotations were made, as compared with Thursday night. The Wall-street markets, except for Money, were strong; Money is offered at 4@5 ₱ cent. to the leading Brokers, on call loan. Gold is steady, but dull, at 111⅜ ₱ cent.:

NEWS OF THE DAY.

FRANCE.

Gens. LE FLO and TROCHU are among the candidates for the National Assembly. A Versailles telegram says returns from eleven Departments indicate the election of Bonapartist, Orleanist and Clerical candidates, but of very few Republicans. The same dispatch says the armistice will be extended to permit the Assembly. The war contribution demanded from Paris is to be divided between North and South Germany, 150,000,000 francs to the former and 50,000,000 to the former.

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

The London Times says it is not the purpose of the Commission on American affairs to find ground for England to abandon her position or concede her liability for the Alabama question....The Pope will at an early day recognize the new Spanish dynasty. The Italian Chamber of Deputies has passed the bill providing a fund for the support of the Pope....The Austrian Reicharath is to meet on the 20th inst. ....The reported Turkish camp on the Roumanian frontier is denied.

CUBA.

An insurgent leader in Cuba, named FERNANDO ESTRADA, was recently captured by the Sub-Prefect at Moron, and executed without delay. JESUS DEL SOL, a recently surrendered Cuban leader, is reported to be acting as a guide to the Spanish troops. A correspondent of the Diario says the Cuban Chambers is dissolved; that CESPEDES is no longer recognized, and IGNACIO AGRAMONTE is Dictator. Several other Cuban leaders are reported killed. Small-pox exists at Puerto Principe.

CONGRESS.

A petition from the New-York Reform League, for a Commission of Inquiry to report on the condition of the freed people, was submitted in the Senate, yesterday. The House bill regulating rank in the navy was reported back, with changes. Eulogies were pronounced upon the late Mr. COVODE, whose death was announced in a message from the House. A bill was introduced increasing the remuneration of the Minister to Berlin to the standard of the London and Paris Missions. The Senate held an evening session, which was devoted to the Appropriation bills.

In the House, Mr. PORTER, of Virginia, made a personal explanation denying the accusations of the Richmond State Journal of Jan. 24. A bill was passed to pay to the widow of GEORGE W. PENDLETON, master in the navy, his share of the prize-money of the steamer Montgomery, for prizes captured while he was a prisoner of war. A protracted debate arose on the bill to permit WM. H. HANSCOM, late Naval Constructor in the Navy, to withdraw his resignation, accepted January, 1866, and to reinstate him in office. Admiral PORTER was bitterly assailed by Messrs. BANKS and BUTLER, the former of whom ascribed to the enmity of the Admiral the compulsory resignation of HANSCOM. In the course of his remarks Mr. BANKS alluded to the steamer Tennessee, saying he had heard within a few days of scores of naval engineers having said she was unseaworthy, and that they were unwilling to risk their lives in her. The intimidation of naval officers by the Department—he did not include the Secretary—had kept the condition of the vessel secret. The bill was passed. The Naval Appropriation bill was discussed and amended in some particulars in Committee of the Whole. The bill providing pensions for soldiers and sailors of the Wars of 1812 and the Revolution was passed, and the House adjourned.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

A bill was introduced in the Senate, yesterday, to incorporate the New-York and Brooklyn Beach Pneumatic Transportation Company, from Bowling-green, under Broadway, to Central Park and Eighth-avenue, and under Fourth-avenue to and under Harlem River. A Manhattan Underground Communication Company bill, to construct a tunnel and railway from Bowling-green to Harlem, was also introduced. The bill relative to fees of the New-York City and County Clerk was passed. Notice was given of a bill to tax non-resident railroad stockholders. The Senate adjourned till Monday evening. An effort was made in the House to refer the bill "to provide a further supply of water for New-York," to the Committee on Internal Affairs, but it failed. The Erie Railway Company's report of its business during the past year was received. A detailed statement of the working of the Onondaga Salt Works since 1860 was asked for. A resolution of welcome to the recently arrived Fenians was adopted. A bill regulating the transportation of petroleum by rail was introduced, together with one requiring railroad companies to pay their debts before declaring dividends. The House adjourned till Monday evening.

GENERAL.

The schooners A. H. Wonson and A. J. Franklin, of Gloucester, Mass., with their stores and cargoes, were condemned yesterday, in Halifax, N. S., under the Canadian Fishery laws. The Judge, Sir WILLIAM YANN, expressed regret at the painful duty, but the evidence was conclusive. In the case of the Franklin, he hoped the Government would remit the penalty in whole or in part. An appeal is to be taken in both cases.

Prof. H. R. AGNEL, of the United States Military Academy, died suddenly at West Point yesterday.

The Kansas House of Representatives has passed a bill permitting criminals to testify in their own behalf, and husband and wife to give testimony in each other's behalf in criminal cases. The Amnesty bill was defeated in the Senate.

The billiard match between DION and DEERY, in San Francisco, on Thursday night, was won by the latter.

The following criminals were executed yesterday in Maryland: JOHN HOWARD, (white,) alias Evans, alias Lewis, at Cumberland, convicted of the murder of HARRY MILLER, Captain of a canal-boat, in August last; JOHN MARTIN, (colored,) at Frederick, convicted of rape, and MARY WALLIS, (colored,) at Upper Marlboro, in Prince George's County, convicted of murder.

Franklin County, Tenn., is in open revolt against the revenue authorities. On Thursday the Deputy United States Marshal and a squad of soldiers, who had made an arrest and seizure, were surrounded by a force of 300 men, their prisoners released, and the property retaken.

CHARLES B. CONKLIN, on trial in Fonda, N. Y., for alleged complicity in the robbery of an express-car, between Fonda and Albany, a year ago last August, was acquitted yesterday.

The Legislature of Nebraska took a recess, yesterday, until March 1, to give time for the Committee appointed to investigate the charges of misdemeanor against Gov. BUTLER to do its work and make a report.

The door of an up-train freight-car swung open, last evening, on the Hudson River Railroad, near Barrytown, just as a down passenger-train was passing, and four windows were crushed, endangering the lives of several passengers. One was saved by being thrown from the seat.

The United States frigate Congress sailed, yesterday, from Havana, for Hayti.

A dwelling in Northampton township, near Doylestown, on Thursday night, was burned, and two children burned to death and the mother dangerously burned.

"Curley" HARRIS, a handcuffed prisoner in custody of an officer, on a charge of shooting a policeman, leaped from a train in motion near Paoli, Penn., and escaped.

GEORGE C. CLARK, a private detective, while conversing with Officer MUNSON, of the Ninth Precinct, in Bank-street, last evening, fell to the sidewalk and instantly died, as is supposed, from heart disease. The remains were taken in charge by the Police to await an inquest.

We are indebted to Capt. EHLERS, of the Hamburg steam-ship Thuringia, for valued additions to our European files.

Good Omens About the Future of the Ring.

There are signs abroad that the Ring of this City, which has so long sat secure in its stronghold of corruption, begins to feel the incessant assaults which are leveled at it The Herald, which is only too glad to pat the Tammany plunderers on the back when they are successful, seeing the storm gathering around them, begins to turn the cold shoulder on them. It seriously warns them that they are going too far, that the disclosure of this enormous Broadway job has affected the whole public mind, and that they are in danger, in pursuing their petty personal schemes and gaining a few millions in the City, of losing the grander prizes which they might have won—the control of the national Government and all its offices. It justly threatens them with the fires of a slow-kindling public indignation which is burning beneath them, and affectionately urges them to turn before it is too late, and not lose to Tammany the victory through the Union, for the sake of their small jobs in New-York City. The Democratic Party, the Herald thinks, is sure of the next President, if they are not obliged to carry into the contest the burdens of the New-York Ring.

Whatever faults the Herald may have been accused of, it has never been charged with ignorance of the peculiar chances and characteristics of the Democratic Party. It sees the danger clearly. The Broadway extension job has, as the Herald says, profoundly moved the public mind. The interruption of it by the sudden death of one of its agents, and the immediate embroilment of the Ring in endless risks and losses thereby, gave the disclosure and explosion of the job something of the character of a providential stroke. It seemed as if Heaven itself thundered against the citadel of corruption. It is true that the skillful jobbers fled from the threatened crash, and, by an audacity hardly ever equaled in legislative annals, are now seeking by law to retrace their own steps, and break up their own job. They will undoubtedly succeed. They will escape before the legal reckoning comes. The great bill by which five millions of dollars were to be put into the pockets of a few sharp rascals, and the poor and middle classes were to pay in heavy taxes for the plunder, will now unquestionably be repealed. Such an occurrence as this cannot fail to profoundly impress honest men of all parties.

Another circumstance is weakening the vigor of the City plunderers. They are growing rich. They have fine houses and equipages. They occupy positions of great power; yet, socially, they have no respect. Honest men do not like to take them by the hand; the doors of self-respecting families are closed to them. Their wealth is like a pirate's gold; it disgraces the owner, and carries with it no private credit. In all their success, these men feel the silent finger of scorn, and this deep, low tone of public and private contempt. They know that all their houses and lots and offices yield them nowhere the most precious of all rewards for a life's toil, the unbought honor of honest men. Hence, they are beginning to court the virtuous. They are trying to get something on the credit side of their books of account with the world. But any such weakness their less successful followers despise, and will not bear. We should not be surprised to hear at any moment of a violent break between the Tammany chiefs and followers—between the plunderers who are rich and trying to look virtuous, and the plunderers who are poor and want money.

Still another thing alarms the Democracy. The rural members who have been left out in the cold in this session of the Legislature, find their positions becoming uncomfortable with their constituents. These simple-minded people cannot understand why the "Democracy" of SILAS WRIGHT and Gov. MARCY, and all the great men of the past, should be constantly identified in the Legislature with Broadway jobs, "Hereditary Religion" acts, Sectarian School bills, and every miserable personal bargain, of the past few years. They will demand an account of their timid delegates. And be it remembered, it only needs a change in two or three districts to carry the next Legislature for the Republicans.

The general and happy result of all this will be a much more reasonable political course of the Democratic Party in this Legislature than was to have been expected. The Protestants will not be trampled on quite as Senator NORTON and others have proposed. Protestant charities and interests will be respected. The "Hereditary Religion" bill will die a peaceful death. There will be no sectarian School act this session. The existing Excise act (such as it is) will not be tampered with. Mr. TWEED'S new Tax Levy scheme may be pushed through, because the Ring need the City income for the next Presidential election. Still, the New-York Democracy are becoming timid, and with timidity may come the first dawn of victory for honest citizens.

The Bar Association.

We are assured, on authority which cannot be questioned, that there is no reluctance on the part of the Bar Association to deal with any of the questions which have recently been so prominently before the public. The Association is still comparatively new, and there had not been time, until very recently, to perfect any organization by which issues relating to individual members, or to lawyers not members, could be tried. A committee, however, which is likely to answer this purpose, was formed at the meeting on Tuesday last, and in due time we may expect to see it take fairly in hand the troublesome subjects which are discussed under circumstances of so much disadvantage in the newspapers.

This intelligence will be received with satisfaction by the public. The facts or allegations which gave rise to the correspondence between Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD and Mr. BOWLES are undoubtedly deserving of some attention from such a body as the Bar Association. We have always supported that society in all its aims, and are far from desiring to do any injustice to it now. The Executive Committee, of course, knew all about the measures it had in preparation, but the public could only see that no apparent notice was being taken of a controversy which seemed to call for the decided action of the Association. In the address to the members of the Bar when the Association was formed—signed by many men of the highest character, such as Mr. HENRY NICOLL, Mr. HAMILTON W. ROBINSON, Gen. BARLOW, and Mr. EVARTS—the assertion was combated that the Bar had ceased to be a profession, and deserved to rank only as a trade. The Address went on to say: "We mean to come together as a body, look the question fairly in the face, and if we find that we have been tainted by the influence of the time, to undertake ourselves the work of purification, to revive a past renown, and give new life to traditions which we believe to be only dormant, not extinct." An organization professing such objects obviously could not afford to overlook the grave imputations which are so repeatedly uttered respecting one of its most distinguished members.

As we have said before, the newspapers have done all the good that they are capable of doing in this matter, and it remains for the Bar to let us know what it thinks of the litigation connected with the Erie suits. It may be decided that Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD is quite right in all that he has done. In that case the public will very soon make up its mind as to the estimation in which the profession is to be held. If Mr. FIELD is to be sustained by the Bar, it is not of much use for the newspapers to criticise his conduct any longer. Perhaps the public and the Press may be accused of showing some impatience on this subject, but they will be quite satisfied when it is once fairly taken up and decided. The Bar Association will amply vindicate its credit by giving a verdict of one kind or another upon the case.

The West Point Difficulty.

So much has been erroneously said and written about the recent occurrences at West Point that the public is interested in knowing the exact facts bearing upon them. They are these: On the 3d of January three cadets of the Fourth or lowest Class were placed in arrest, by order of the commandant, for the following reasons: BAIRD, for being absent from his quarters during part of the previous night; FLECKINGER, for reporting "all right," knowing that his roommate BAIRD was absent without authority; and BARNES, for making a false statement to a sentinel, and under cover of it paying visits, without authority. The offense of the latter was quite distinct from that of the other two. Drunkenness had nothing to do with the matter, for none of the cadets were accused of it, although BAIRD tried to escape punishment by declaring that he was drunk. The proper penalty for drunkenness is dismissal, though it has been customary to remit this punishment when the entire class of which the offender is a member agree to take the pledge of total abstinence. All the classes at the Academy are now on pledge, except the Fourth Class.

The First Class having learned all the facts regarding these three members of the Fourth Class, and having other additional proofs of their want of veracity, held a meeting, and with but two dissenting voices resolved to administer a lesson to the offenders which would impress upon the entire corps the necessity and importance of truthfulness. As the cadets of the First Class have been longest at the Academy, they are looked up to by the rest of the corps, and their action in a great measure determines the sentiments of all the graduates. It is also fair to state that the course taken by the First Class was approved by all the other classes when it was made known to them. There can be no question as to the motive which prompted the expulsion of these cadets. There was no personal animosity or prejudice in it, but merely an honest, though mistaken, endeavor to crush out an evil practice. Whatever may be the other defects of the officers of the regular army, one of them who is known to be a liar is always ostracised by his fellow-officers, and this feeling is intensified among the young soldiers at West Point. The good fame of the Academy was deemed to be at stake if this action of BAIRD, FLECKINGER and BARNES was suffered to pass unnoticed. The First Class, therefore, threw themselves into the breach, and undertook the vindication of their Alma Mater.

The three culprits were quietly visited at midnight on Tuesday, and directed to clothe themselves in citizens' dress, and ordered to leave the Academy. They were led to the Highland Falls road, behind the barrack, and were bid good-bye with a caution never to return, as their trunks would be sent after them. No violence was used, no disturbance raised, none of the party wore masks, and there was no disguise.

This is a simple statement of the facts of the case. The action of the cadets was a mistaken effort in behalf of a good cause, and was no mere boyish freak. The punishment for this offense was the severest it was in the power of the Superintendent to inflict. The right of dismissal is vested only in the authorities at Washington, but Col. PITCHER ordered that the cadets of the First Class should be deprived of all privileges, and be confined to even narrower limits than is the case under ordinary circumstances. To these young men, at a comparatively isolated post, it is no small matter to be deprived of the right to visit their friends, and to be debarred from sharing in the only amusements Winter affords, and, moreover, to be deprived even of the right to ask for these privileges. Yet the class submit to these restrictions without a murmur, being now convinced of their error and of the justice of their sentence. They did wrong, doubtlessly, but not quite so wrong as the students who were concerned in the blowing up with gunpowder at Harvard, or those engaged in the recent riot at Yale, or in the burning of the recitation-room at Dartmouth.

Discipline has never been better at West Point than just now. Were any proof of this assertion needed, we have it in the action of the cadets in putting out the recent fire in the barracks. In the language of an eye-witness of their performances on that occasion, "Had you seen the cadets fight the flames at the burning of a portion of the barracks, at 2:20 o'clock Sunday morning, when the thermometer was 6° below zero, you would have seen in the noiseless, undemonstrative, ice-clad boys some traces of discipline not found in your great City. Obedient, cheerful, with frozen feet and hands, the 'Kuklux at West Point' did their duty, as you know they have done in times past."

We have no desire to palliate the offense of the First Class, but however their action may be condemned, it was not such as would cast discredit on their parents, and no father need feel ashamed of his son for having participated in it—and that is more than can be said of most students' scrapes.

Mr. Hoppin's Address to the Union League Club.

Nothing could have been better or more suggestively stated than the definition given by Mr. HOPPIN, on Thursday evening, of the scope and influence of the Club whose members have just elected him as their President. His inaugural address lays down in a manner which is at once vigorous and comprehensive, the relations of the Union League Club to the great purposes which the founders proposed that it should serve. Mr. HOPPIN claims, with undeniable justice, that the fundamental principles prescribed for their guidance seven years ago, are as vital today as ever. These are "to elevate and uphold the popular faith in popular government; to dignify politics as a pursuit and a study; to reawaken a practical interest in public affairs in those who have become discouraged, and to enforce a sense of the sacred obligations inherent in citizenship." We may safely go even further than the new President, and claim that the need of advocating such practical reforms as are here implied is more urgent and binding than ever it was. The indifference to public affairs of "respectable and intelligent citizens of the United States," is an evil that not only exists in undiminished vitality, but seems likely to become indefinitely expanded. Mr. HOPPIN touches the true source of all our troubles when he reminds us, that "the theory of self-government rests entirely upon the active participation of the best citizens in public affairs," and he gives an exceedingly faithful summary of the pass to which a neglect of this duty has brought the community of this State and City, in allowing their interests to "fall into the hands of unscrupulous demagogues, who study the technical machinery of legislation for no other purpose but to fill their pockets, and to become the heroes of a demoralized community, which regards success in crime as the equivalent of merit, and exalts gigantic theft to the dignity of public virtue."

To those who labor for a prospective reform of public sentiment, it is something to know that New-York contains a thousand high-toned and intelligent gentlemen who can subscribe to sentiments like these. Mr. HOPPIN is right in believing that their unanimous declaration on any public question "would be listened to with respectful attention." He might have gone further, and reminded his hearers how vast would be the sphere of their combined personal influence were it employed to spread abroad the principles which he so ably and earnestly advocates. Maxims of political rectitude require a little contagious enthusiasm to make them vital and operative, just as much as do the truths of the cognate sphere of morals. It is well enough to keep the sacred light burning in the rooms of the Union League Club, but if it is ever to illumine the dark places of political iniquity, the spark must be sent abroad by each man who has felt the brightness and the warmth of the flame. It is quite true that the founders of our institutions never contemplated the possibility of a "time when educated and respectable people would take only a speculative interest in public affairs." It is also true that the first step for any man who sincerely recognizes "the sacred obligation inherent in citizenship," and who desires to give practical effect thereto, is to descend into the arena where the battle of contending factions is being waged, and throw the weight of his influence on the side of integrity, and against organized corruption and fraud.

The Negroes.

Senator REVELS may be supposed to be competent to speak of the effect of legislation upon the relations of races, and of the injury that is sometimes done to the colored man by over-zeal in his behalf. He now discourages the idea of mixed schools in the District of Columbia, as the price of compulsory education. The cruelty produced by the prejudice against color cannot be exaggerated. The outgrowth of a system which has happily been swept away, it remains evidence of the great wrong which the promoters of the rebel Confederacy made their corner-stone. It is idle to ignore the existence of the prejudice, or the extent to which it is diffused throughout society. Legislators may denounce it and enact laws against it, but still it exists. The more they assail it, the more demonstrative it is. You try to stamp it out, and it burns more mischievously than before.

This is one of the matters in which time and events operate more effectually than law. The great source of the prejudice was stopped when slavery was abolished, and the period that has since elapsed has done much toward obliterating mere unreasoning hatred of the negro. Indeed, the progress made in this direction has exceeded the most sanguine expectations. The law has clothed the colored man with all the attributes of citizenship. It has secured him equality before the law, and invested him with the ballot. There may yet remain a necessity for affording him educational facilities in States whose local authorities fail to do their duty in this respect. But here the province of law will end. All else must be left to the operation of causes more potent than law, and wholly beyond its reach. Party exigencies have given the black man political importance. Even Tammany tenders him a place in its processions, and is silently snubbed for its pains. His old oppressors in the South rest their only hope of party success upon their ability to obtain his good-will. He rides in our street-cars, jostles white men at public meetings, and from his seat in Congress teaches a lesson which the Senators around him may usefully ponder. The change in popular sentiment respecting him has been rapid, and on the whole satisfactory; and the ratio of its growth will be greater in the future than in the past. All that is now needed is that he shall henceforth be allowed to make his way in the world quietly, and in reliance upon his merits. The law protects him, or should be amended if it does not. For the rest, give him fair play, and do not make too much fuss about him.

Right of Way for Horse and Horse-Cars.

For a City which is the Metropolis of a great country, and which boasts of being one of the centres of modern civilization, New-York is curiously deficient in many of the simplest appliances of comfort and convenience. Only now, after years of urging and desiring, are we beginning to realize in an imperfect way a few of the advantages of the Parisian system of living in flats. Years of extortion and misery, in the matter of local transportation, have failed to secure for us the relief of cabs. In stormy weather we wade about contentedly through a sea of slush and mud, just as if we did not pay roundly for clean thoroughfares. We suffer our ash and garbage carts to select the busiest hours of daylight and the most frequented streets, for their intolerable processions. Bar-rooms flourish because we have no public drinking fountains, and our young men are driven to drunkenness and gambling, or worse, for their Sunday recreation, because we shut on that day the libraries and art galleries which would afford them agreeable and innocent amusement.

But it is in the one matter of street-cars that we seem to have concentrated all the deficiencies that could tend to neutralize their naturally great convenience. Many of these we have dwelt on before,—the lack of transfer tickets, of heat in Winter, of comfort at all times, the constant overcrowding. Cars, in which from thirty to sixty standing passengers are usually crammed together for an entire trip, are furnished with say a dozen straps, often less. The consequence is that the strapless unfortunates are at every jolt tumbled and tossed over and against one another, and mutually dragged and pushed about in a way that would be ludicrous if it were not still more disagreeable. Many of these discomforts will be remedied, in part, for those at least who can afford the increased tariff, by the introduction of such drawing-room cars as it is in contemplation to run on the Third-avenue Road. But this amelioration for the vast majority of the car-using public will be only a drop in the ocean, and will not at all touch the one particular trouble which we have reserved to the last, because the annoyance it causes is only equaled by the stupidity which permits it.

Every time there is a fire in the vicinity of a horse-railroad, which necessitates the laying of hose across the track, the road is at once blocked for hours, and the cars are unable to move either way until the fire is extinguished. Doubtless there is not one among our resident readers who has not at one time or other been subjected to this unnecessary and exasperating interruption. And yet the remedy is so simple, and has so long been used in neighboring cities which we are wont to deride for inferior enterprise, that only the most persistent blindness could have failed to see or to take advantage of it. It consists merely of a pair of small iron arches or "frogs," readily carried under the seat when not in use, which are fitted to the track so as to cover and protect the hose while the car passes over them. The whole process takes perhaps a minute, the firemen are not interfered with, travel is not delayed, and the time and temper of passengers are saved. Might it not be worth the while of our car companies to try this trifling innovation? Mere discomfort may be long submitted to in silence, but time is money and cannot be rashly wasted, even by monopolies which count Legislatures among their available assets.

MINOR TOPICS.

The roof of the TIMES building has not quite been lifted off, and the earth generally continues to revolve on its own axis once in every twenty-four hours,—facts which will seem incredible when the astonished world learns that Mr. W. O. BARTLETT, a lawyer, and a writer for the Sun, has paid two visits to this office, breathing out fearful threats of law Courts on each occasion. Our offense is that we quoted from the well-known pamphlet, The Biter Bit, a paragraph accusing Mr. BARTLETT of puffing Judge BARNARD from certain motives not very creditable to either party. Mr. BARTLETT did not ask us to publish his denial of this charge, but sent his "card" (about a yard in length) to the newspaper in which he is said to have drawn graceful portraits of Judge BARNARD. After that, Mr. BARTLETT wants to get up a discussion about some dead and gone correspondence, which has no more to do with the pamphleteer's statements than the story of Cock Robin or Jack the Giant Killer. We should not have refused insertion to that portion of Mr. BARTLETT'S little "card" which bears upon the charges brought against him—and we may now give him the credit of stating that he emphatically denies those charges. But when he comes fussing and fuming about after having published his defense in his own way, we cannot see that we can do anything for him. As for what he can do with us, let him go to work and leave off talking about it.

Were the international Commission on the Alabama and other questions to be animated by the spirit of the London Times, there would be very little reason for congratulation at its appointment. The Times has, of late, been singularly unfortunate in the accuracy of its authoritative statements, and very probably the latest one about the supposed inability of England "to abandon her position or to concede her liability upon the Alabama question," is equally unfounded. A Commission that should meet with the certainty that one side had already prejudged the questions at issue, and was perfectly resolved to refuse to be convinced, had better not meet at all. The sagacity of the men at the head of both Governments may be relied on to avert any such fiasco as that which the statement of the Times would necessarily involve.

A cable telegram announces that in eleven departments of France, from which the election returns have been received, the Bonapartist, Orleanist and clerical candidates have been returned to the almost entire exclusion of the Republicans. Without knowing the names of these departments, it is impossible to estimate the precise significance of this fact. It is necessary to bear in mind that, exclusive of Savoy and Nice, there are in all eighty-nine departments in France, the respective population of which varies from 130,000 to upward of two millions. The Deputies to the National Assembly will represent a fixed percentage of constituents, so that to attempt to estimate the relative strength of parties by the votes of departments not specified, is apt to be exceedingly misleading.

The Turkish Minister at Washington having been withdrawn, it devolves upon the Turkish Government to choose his successor. Although a foreign journal can scarcely offer advice on such a subject with much confidence, still there is no impropriety in suggesting that there would be many advantages in appointing to the vacant position the gentleman who has for many years occupied the position of Consul-General at this port—Mr. C. OSCANYAN. He has gained the confidence of all who have had business relations with him, and in the course of twenty years' residence in this country has necessarily made himself very familiar with public questions. As the official representative of the Ottoman Empire at Washington, he would doubtless be as successful as in the past he has been in a more contracted sphere of official life. Mr. OSCANYAN is fairly entitled to this commendation after twenty years' residence among us.

The Springfield Republican comments upon an article which appeared in this paper, on "Our Differences with England," and ascribes it to "Administration influences" and "CONKLING malice." The Republican ought to be above imputing motives of this sort. Is it not enough to contradict and denounce the views of any journal, without ascribing those views to persons or influences concerning which the writer must necessarily speak on mere conjecture? We meet our contemporary's remarks by asserting that the Administration and Mr. CONKLING had no more to do with the article in question than the man in the moon, and that their wishes on the subject were as utterly unthought of by us as they probably were by the writer in the Springfield Republican. If the Republican objects to our having opinions of any kind on public affairs, well and good; we shall bow to its decision; but in the meanwhile we invite it to give up fancying it sees what does not exist.

A proposal to exempt mortgages from taxation looked at first like discrimination in favor of capitalists, and the representatives of the rural districts voted against it. Now, the farmers complain of the inconvenience they suffer, and the injury which menaces them, as a result of inability to borrow money on mortgage, and the refusal of mortgagees to extend the time for repayment when actually due. Foreclosure is threatened, and that, in the many cases, means ruin. The difficulty is altogether the result of excessive local taxation. From twenty-five to fifty per cent. of the interest is absorbed by taxation, and that fact renders mortgages in many districts of this State very undesirable as investments. Either the rate of taxation on these securities must be restricted, or borrowers must bear the burden in addition to the regular interest,—or the money available for mortgage-loans will be easily counted.

Postmaster-General CRESWELL'S communication to the Senate Committee with reference to his action on the Chorpenning claim, fully bears out the conclusion embodied in the report presented on the subject, viz., "that the Postmaster-General did not deviate from the discharge of his official duty in the settlement made, but strictly obeyed the law of Congress, and that Congress alone should assume the responsibility, if any, in enjoining upon him the fulfillment of a duty which has led to such surprising results." In the letter in question the Postmaster-General states that CHORPENNING'S petition for an additional compensation for certain postal services rendered, was presented to him as it had been to four of his predecessors, and was rejected by him on the ground that the case had been already decided, and should not be disturbed without further legislation. When, by a joint resolution of Congress, approved July 25, 1870, he was directed to adjust all the claims of CHORPENNING in a prescribed manner, at a fixed compensation, and according to the affidavits and proofs on file in the House of Representatives, he was, as he justly declares, made a mere accounting officer, without retaining any power to decide upon the justice or validity of such claims. It is evident that the Postmaster-General did all in his power to save the Government from blindly subscribing to the blunder of Congress, and that throughout, his conduct has been animated by a strict regard to the obligations of public duty.

It is said that an Irishman in First-avenue exhibited a large banner in front of his premises, during the Fenian procession on Thursday, on which was inscribed, "Welcome to New-Ireland." This may seem funny to some people; but the Irishman knows what he is at. He has formed a much more accurate estimate of the true tendency of political life in this City than those who smile at his banner with the strange device.

After a newspaper controversy in New-York, it is common to see a particular article running the rounds of the country Press, furnished by some disreputable friend of the losing party in that controversy. Such an article is now being distributed from New-York, and is published by the Utica Daily Observer, among other papers. The Utica Observer has thus been entrapped into printing a tissue of untruths, and has brought as much discredit upon itself as such an act can involve it in. The Utica Observer has no motive that we know of for slandering its contemporaries—but the temptation of getting an "editorial" for nothing seems to have been too much for its virtue. Perhaps the day will come when respectable country journals will decline to insert calumnies at the instigation of tipsy Bohemians in New-York.

A correspondent of the Evening Post having asked "Who is Lord BOOTHWICK?" and answered his own question, proceeds to say: "I have not seen Lord BOOTHWICK'S letter to Mr. FIELD." Innocent man! He is not likely to see it, if all that we hear of it be true, unless Lord BOOTHWICK sends a copy of it for publication. This course would be due to himself, seeing that a reply to his letter has been published by Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD.

The extraordinary method adopted by Mr. BANKS of defending Mr. HANSCOM, the ex-naval constructor, in the House yesterday, formed the occasion of some very wild talk. It is to be hoped that the hints thrown out with reference to the doubts entertained about the unseaworthiness of the Tennessee may be as baseless as the other vague charges so freely ventilated on the same occasion. The delay that has occurred in the first voyage of the vessel bearing the San Domingo Commission is hardly excuse enough for circulating an accusation so serious, any more than it justifies the disquieting rumors that have already prevailed relating to the fate of the vessel. Unfortunately, the way in which Mr. BANKS chose to repel any charge of imperfection in the Tennessee, was not calculated to reassure those concerned in her safety.

AMUSEMENTS.

Business Today.

Matinees occur at all the theatres today. At Wallack's "Faint Heart" and "Used Up" will be acted for the last time. At the Fourteenth-street Theatre, Miss EFFIE JOHNS, "the elfin star," will make her début in "Fanchon." Elsewhere the usual attractions will be presented. An additional musical matinée by Miss MARIE KREBS will be given at Steinway Hall, beginning at 2 o'clock. At the regular popular concert at Association Hall, Miss ANTOINETTE RONCONI, Signor GIORGIO RONCONI, Mr. WM. MACDONALD, Mr. ISAAC B. POZNANSKI, Mr. JOSEPH POZNANSKI and Signor ANTONIO L. MORA will perform.

The Concert for the Strasbourg Sufferers.

It is hoped that the concert for the benefit of the Strasbourg sufferers, which is to take place at Steinway Hall Feb. 15, will be an uncommonly fine affair. A number of leading artists have volunteered their services, and the management of the entertainment is under the charge of the well-known musician and composer Prof. RITTER, who is exerting himself energetically for the benefit of his Alsatian countrymen. The Executive Committee for this concert consists of Messrs. Henry W. Bellows, Elbe Charlier, Paul W. Cæsar, P. Marie, Dr. H. Gouiden, Dr. A. Kessler, William Steinway, Charles Haussli, Charles C. Dodge, Raimund Schramm, William C. Bryant, Jacques Schieb, Joh. Lienau, Louis Hickmann, H. De Marell, J. H. Liebenau, Joseph Seligmann, Fred. Louis Ritter, Ch. Lasalle, H. Wesendonck. Donations for the concert fund will also be received by Mr. PAUL W. CÆSAR, Treasurer, at No. 9 South William-street; Mr. F. MARIE, at No. 43 West Nineteenth-street; Mr. JACQUES SCHIEB, at No. 23 Maiden-lane, and any of the Committee. We trust this movement will be abundantly successful.

FORTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

THIRD SESSION.

SENATE....WASHINGTON, Friday, Feb. 10.

Numerous petitions were presented from individuals for the removal of political disabilities, for pensions, for the modification of the Homestead laws, for the benefit of the soldiers of the late war, and by Mr. SUMNER, from the Reform League of New-York, for the appointment of a Commission of Inquiry to visit the South, examine witnesses, and report on the condition of the freed people there.

NAVAL RANK.

Mr. CRAGIN, of New-Hampshire, from the Naval Committee, reported back with amendments the bill to regulate rank in the navy of the United States, and for other purposes. The principal changes by the Senate Committee in the House bill regulating rank in the navy are the following:

The rank of all staff officers is assimilated instead of positive, the phrase used throughout the bill being "shall rank with." The number of Chief Engineers is increased to forty-five. Commanding and executive officers, when on duty, are to take precedence of all others. With this exception precedence is to be in accordance with rank and length of service, but staff officers shall be credited with six years' additional time, as an equivalent to the term of the Naval Academy, and officers who have been advanced or lost numbers on the register shall be considered as having gained or lost length of time accordingly. It is provided, also, that chiefs of bureaus may be appointed from persons having the rank of Captains in the Staff Corps. The section in relation to precedence of commanding and executive officers is as follows:

And be it further enacted, That commanding officers of vessels of war and of naval stations shall take precedence over all officers placed under their command; that the executive officers of vessels of war and naval stations, representing the commanding officer thereof, shall, so far as practicable, be next in rank to said commanding officer, and shall, when acting as such representatives, take precedence over all officers attached to the said vessels or naval stations while in the discharge of their respective duties not connected with said vessels or naval stations, and such orders as said executive officers may give shall be regarded as coming from said commanding officer.

OTHER REPORTS.

Mr. HOWARD, of Michigan, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, reported with an amendment the bill to incorporate the Red River Valley, Oxalhama and Santa Fé Railroad Company.

Mr. FLANAGAN, of Texas, called up the bill. He said it asked for no land or money subsidy, but simply for the right of way through the Indian and other Territories.

The bill was partially read, but objected to on account of its great length, and laid over.

Mr. POMEROY, of Kansas, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported with a slight amendment the House bill to amend section 25 of the act of July 5, 1870, to provide homesteads for officers, soldiers, seamen and marines of the late war. It allows an additional quarter section of Government land.

SOUTHERN OUTRAGES.

The Vice-President appointed Mr. NYE, of Nevada, in place of Mr. STEWART, resigned, on the Southern Outrage Investigating Committee.

BRIDGING THE MISSISSIPPI.

The bill in relation to the railroad bridge across the Mississippi River, which was favorably reported on yesterday, was today recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

INDIAN LANDS IN NEW-YORK.

Mr. FENTON, of New-York, submitted an amendment to the Indian Appropriation bill, making a small appropriation to pay for an inquiry or investigation by one or more Commissioners, to be appointed by the President, in regard to the occupancy, by leave or otherwise, of the Indian lands at Salamanca, New-York, and other points on the Allegheny Reservation, in New-York. Laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

QUICKSILVER.

Mr. STEWART, of Nevada, presented a memorial from the Nevada Legislature for the repeal of the duty on quicksilver.

PAY OF CIVIL ENGINEERS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. THAYER, of Nebraska, introduced a joint resolution making the pay of Civil Engineers in the navy the same as that of Naval Constructors of the same period of service. Referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

THE HOUSE CONTINGENT FUND.

Mr. COLE, of California, Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the House bill making an appropriation of $15,000 for a contingent fund of the House of Representatives. Passed.

Without concluding the business of the morning hour, the Senate, at 12¾, went into Executive session.

At 3¼ the doors were reopened.

THE MISSION TO BERLIN.

Mr. MORTON, of Indiana, introduced a bill to establish a diplomatic mission to Berlin, upon the same grade and emoluments with those at Paris and London, fixing the salary of the Minister at $17,500, and of the Secretary of Legation at $2,625, per annum. Referred.

TESTIMONY OF COLORED MEN.

Mr. MORTON also submitted a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to inquire what further legislation is necessary, if any, to secure the colored people of Kentucky and other States the right to testify in State Courts in cases in which white persons are parties. Not acted upon.

THE LATE MR. COVODE.

A message was received from the House announcing the death of Representative COVODE, of Pennsylvania, when the remarks eulogistic of deceased were made by Messrs. SCOTT, BUCKALEW, SHERMAN and CAMERON, and the customary resolutions of respect adopted.

At 4¾ o'clock, the Senate took a recess until evening, for the purpose of considering the Appropriation bills.

EVENING SESSION.

THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

The attendance of members at the evening session was very slim, the number present at any one time not exceeding sixteen. The exclusive business of the evening being the reading and perfecting of the Appropriation bills in Committee of the Whole, the Senate took up the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill, of which forty-seven pages remained to be read. The amendments to the bill, reported from the Committee on Appropriations, were agreed to, except the more important ones relating to judicial salaries and prohibiting officials from being interested in claims coming before the Departments, action upon which was deferred.

Amendments were reported from the Committee on Public Buildings appropriating $500,000 for the new State Department building; for settling apart the Capital and Agricultural Department grounds, and the grounds south of the President's house, for the establishment of a public park; and providing for the sale of one-third of Judiciary-square, being that on the north side, which is no longer required by the Government. Debate upon the amendments was reserved until action could be taken upon them by a full Senate.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The bill was finally laid on the aside, and the Indian Appropriation bill taken up. The amendments reported from the Committee on Appropriations involving a general reduction of the appropriation voted by the House of Representatives, were concurred in.

Both bills, as amended, were ordered to be printed, and at 10 o'clock the Senate adjourned until to-morrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. PORTER, of Virginia, rising to a personal explanation, referred to a communication reflecting upon him, published in the Richmond State Journal, of the 24th of January, but which had been omitted in the copy of the same issue of the paper which had been forwarded to him as a subscriber. He referred to the editor of that paper, Mr. GILLIS, as being so much of a Copperhead that President LINCOLN had him removed from a clerkship in one of the Departments, and as being still regarded as a Copperhead. Referring to a remark made by Mr. COX in the House, a week ago, as to his (PORTER'S) having been put in irons for abusing the Government, he denied that there was any truth in the assertion.

MEMORIALS, REPORTS AND OTHER MATTERS.

Mr. CLARK, of Texas, presented a telegram from the Governor of that State, with a copy of a joint resolution of the Legislature asking for Government aid to build the Southern Pacific Railroad.

Mr. VAN WYCK, of New-York, presented a petition of citizens of New-York City against further donations of public lands for railroad purposes, and to reserve the lands to actual settlement.

The House proceeded to the consideration of private bills.

MONTGOMERY PRIZE MONEY.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill for payment to the widow of the late GEORGE W. PENDLETON, Master in the navy, of his share of the prize money that came to the United States steamer Montgomery, for prizes captured while he was a prisoner of war, to be paid, if the money has all been distributed, out of the moiety belonging to the United States. Passed.

MR. HANSCOM—THE "TENNESSEE."

Mr. STARKWEATHER, of Connecticut, from the same Committee, reported a bill to permit WILLIAM L. HANSCOM, late naval constructor in the navy, to withdraw his resignation which was accepted on the 5th of January, 1866, and to reinstate him in the office. The bill was opposed by Messrs. ARCHER of Maryland, and SARGENT of California, on the ground of a corrupt transaction of HANSCOM'S in 1866, in connection with his official duties, and which had led to his resignation.

Mr. STARKWEATHER denied that there was any truth in the charge, and said that it was not that charge which had led to Mr. HANSCOM'S resignation, but on advice which he had given to the Navy Department at that time in reference to the twenty light-draft monitors which were being then built, and which he had told Secretary WELLES would never float. After that advice his place was made so uncomfortable that he had to resign.

Mr. BANKS, of Massachusetts, advocated the bill, and stated that the Secretary of the Navy was anxious to have the authority to reinstate HANSCOM, but he was not satisfied that he had that legal authority.

Mr. FARNSWORTH, of Illinois, remarked that there was no doubt about the legal authority of the Secretary of the Navy in the premises.

Mr. BANKS repeated that the Secretary had doubt as to his authority, and therefore wanted the action of Congress in the matter. As to the charges against Mr. HANSCOM that were trumped up and sent to the House by Admiral PORTER, he declared that Mr. HANSCOM bore as honorable a reputation as any man in Massachusetts, and that in the opinion of the people of the country Mr. HANSCOM was as superior in point of reputation to Admiral PORTER as the Apostle John was to the traitor Judas. [Laughter.] Even if the charges against Mr. HANSCOM were true that he had received remuneration for giving men employment in the Charlestown Navy-yard (as they were false as hell,) his character would still be better than that of those officers of the navy who had compounded the felony and let him go unpunished. He denounced it as an infamous proceeding on the part of high officials in the Navy Department to come to the House and say that they had detected a man in fraud which should have sent him to the Penitentiary, and had let him go in order that they might get his place for one of their friends. Referring to the intimidation of naval officers by the Department, he said that he had heard within the last two days, of scores of naval engineers having said that the Tennessee, now on her way to San Domingo or some other place, was not seaworthy, and that they were unwilling to risk their lives in her. He did not understand, however, that any engineer of the navy had said to Mr. WADE or to President WADE or to Dr. HOWE: "If you take the voyage on this vessel you do it at the risk of your lives." Why had they not told some of those three hundred souls who had gone—no one knows where or how—that if they placed their foot on the Tennessee they were in danger of being lost forever! Because they were cowed; because they were in a situation where they could not give their honest opinion, because if they ran counter to the schemes of the Bureau men—and he did not refer at all to the Secretary of the Navy—they would lose their place and their reputation. So Mr. HANSCOM had run counter to their plans in condemning the twenty light-draft monitors, and he thereby lost his place and his standing in the Department. They rooted Mr. HANSCOM out of his little place in the Charlestown Navy-yard, and by allowing the commerce of the country to be destroyed they prevented him getting employment in his profession in private ship-yards.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to lay the bill on the table. Negatived without a division.

Mr. SARGENT made another argument against the bill, and alluded to the indecent hostility manifested by former officers of the navy to Admiral PORTER. It seemed to him that calling Admiral PORTER a Judas Iscariot was but a poor recognition for the gentleman's service which he had rendered to the country. That, however, was a matter of taste. As to HANSCOM'S innocence of the charge made, he challenged explanation of the fact that the notes which HANSCOM had received for the place which he had given to one WIGGINS were in possession of the Navy Department.

Mr. HALE defended the Navy Department from responsibility for the Tennessee, and threw the responsibility on Congress, which, though scotified by Admiral PORTER that the navy was worn out and useless, had not made appropriations to renew and maintain the navy.

Mr. STEVENSON, of Ohio, reminded Mr. HALE that the Tennessee was a new vessel, her trip to San Domingo being her first voyage.

Mr. BANKS remarked that he had sustained appropriations for the navy.

Mr. FARNSWORTH was reminded by the attack on Admiral PORTER of the truth of the remark of Mr. Justice Dogberry that comparisons are odorous. It was vain for gentlemen to attempt to traduce the fame which Admiral PORTER had won.

Mr. BANKS—In his correspondence?

Mr. FARNSWORTH—Comparisons are odorous, says Mr. Justice Dogberry.

Mr. BANKS—Is that the authority of the gentleman from Illinois? [Loud laughter.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH—Admiral PORTER has made a record which will last forever, while the records of some gentlemen, who make comparisons, they should wish not to live forever.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, closed the discussion in a speech in which he was very severe on Admiral PORTER. Little of what he said, however, reached the reporter in an intelligible shape, as the members gathered around Mr. BUTLER'S desk, interesting sight and sound. He said he had long since learned the wisdom of the maxim, "De mortuis nil nisi bonum," and if Admiral PORTER only lay still in his grave, if his friends did not resurrect him to offend the nostrils of the House, he (Mr. BUTLER) would not have said a word about him. He said that this was no new quarrel between Mr. HANSCOM and Admiral PORTER. Admiral PORTER had been a young Lieutenant at the Portsmouth Navy-yard when Mr. HANSCOM was Naval Constructor there. The civilian and the martinet had come in contact, and there had been laid the foundation of an enmity that had lasted a lifetime. Mr. HANSCOM believed from that hour he had been hunted by Amdiral PORTER in every conceivable way. Speaking of Admiral PORTER'S connection with the Navy Department, he said that he never was officially Secretary of the Navy. He had once been officially Assistant Secretary of the Navy. No member of Congress should have recognized him as Secretary. He had left a place he never ought to have held.

Mr. BANKS remarked that he once went to the Navy Department to ask a favor from the Secretary. Admiral PORTER had just gone out, and the Secretary said to him: "BANKS, why the devil don't you ask Admiral PORTER?" [Laughter.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE—And why the devil didn't you?

Mr. BANKS—He had just gone out. It was not the present Secretary.

Mr. BUTLER, resuming, narrated the motives, which induced Mr. HANSCOM to resign, and which had no reference to the charges made by Mr. WIGGINS. As to the affidavits, there was nothing so dangerous as such things, and if he were to produce a bundle of affidavits which he had, there were some gentlemen who had spoken on this subject who would be hanged without Judge or jury. [Laughter.] Who was opposing Mr. HANSCOM? Not the Secretary of the Navy; not the Committee on Naval Affairs; but Mr. PORTER—Admiral PORTER by the grace of the Senate. [Laughter.] Admiral PORTER'S services during the war would live for some time. He thought they would be indestructible. All along the Mississippi were guns captured by the army, and marked by PORTER taken by the navy under the command of D. D. PORTER; and so long as white paint remained, so long would the memory of PORTER'S deeds remain in the minds of those who believed him, but who were few. [Laughter.] It was easy to make such a record as that. If a man would only blow his own trumpet loud enough—if he could make himself the great "I am" of the expedition—if he could strike down the great and glorious FARRAGUT, and send him to the grave with the feeling that his country had wronged him—then he might get such a reputation, and that was the sort of service which Admiral PORTER had rendered to his country. In conclusion, he begged gentlemen not to offend his nostrils and make him wish that he had a wash-bowl and tooth-brush to clean out his mouth, by bringing that man PORTER before the House again. Let PORTER rest in the corruption which he had made for himself.

Mr. STARKWEATHER then called for the vote.

Mr. COX, of New-York—As Judas Iscariot is on the Republican side of the House, let him speak. [Laughter.]

The bill was passed—yeas 143, nays 67.

It is a Senate bill, and now goes to the President for his approval.

THE NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The House then, at 2:40 o'clock P. M., went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. COX in the chair, on the Naval Appropriation bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, moved to insert an additional section authorizing the President to accept the resignation of any officer of the navy until the number of officers in the grade to which such officer shall belong is reduced to the number authorized by law, and whose resignation shall take effect on or before the 1st of January next; any officer so resigning to be entitled to one year's sea pay, in addition to the pay due such officer at the date when his resignation takes effect. The provision is not to apply after the number of officers shall have been reduced to the number allowed by law. Agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS, of New-Hampshire, moved to amend the section by providing that there shall be no promotion to the grade of Rear-Admiral, Commodore, Captain or Commander in the line until the number in those grades shall be reduced to the number fixed by the second section of the act of 16th of July, 1862, to establish and equalize the grades of line officers of the navy.

On a point of order made by Mr. MAYNARD, of Tennessee, the Chairman decided STEVENS' amendment to be out of order.

The Committee then rose, and reported the bill, and it was passed by the House.

The House then, at 4:40, adjourned till to-morrow.

Obituary.

J. W. WEAVER, Esq., a prominent citizen of Winooski, Vt., died on Friday last, after a week's illness. He attended a funeral a week before his death and caught a severe cold, which prostrated him, being in a general feeble state of health, from which he did not recover. He has long been identified with the interests of the prosperous village of his residence. He had a large circle of friends at home and abroad—in fact, throughout the country. Many of the graduates of the University of Vermont will remember with pleasure the hospitality of his home during their college course. He was the father-in-law of the late Hon. HENRY J. RAYMOND, editor of the NEW-YORK TIMES, and of ROBERT D. BENEDICT, of Brooklyn, also of WILLIAM ROBERTSON, Esq., a prominent advocate of Montreal.—Rutland Herald.

Mr. BRENTANO (No. 33 Union-square) has received the leading publications of England by the latest steamer. The Graphic, of Jan. 28, is a brilliant number; two of its pictures would alone be sufficient to give it a reputation. These are a double-page engraving called "In the Clutch of the Enemy," and a view from a French window—"Another Sortie." The Illustrated London News, Nature, Punch, and the Saturday Review maintain their old characteristics.

ERIE'S DIFFICULTIES.

The Foreign Stockholders Moving Again—Petition to Repeal the Classification Act.

Mr. JOHN SWANN, of London, representing the interests of a large number of the English and other foreign shareholders in the Erie Railway Company, proposes to submit to the Legislature of this State, during the course of the present session, a petition asking for the repeal of a section of the bill popularly known as the Erie Directors' bill, which authorizes the classification of the directors so that only one-fifth shall go out of office each year—a provision which is applicable to several of the railroads of this State, but which has been taken advantage of by the Erie managers. The petition has been numerously signed. The following is a copy of it:

The Honorable the Legislature of the State of New-York:

We, the undersigned, who are respectively shareholders of the Erie Railway Company to the extent stated opposite our signatures, respectfully ask your honorable body to repeal the law commonly known as the "Erie Railway Director's Classification bill," being chapter 916 of the laws of 1869, passed May 20, 1869, entitled "An act to amend chapter 278 of the laws of 1868, entitled 'An act in relation to the Erie, New-York Central, Hudson River and Harlem Railway Companies,'" and to provide that at the next annual election, in October of this year, the terms of office of all the present directors of the Erie Railway Company shall expire, and an entire new Board be elected. The circumstances under which this act was passed, and the evil results which have flowed from its practical working, are so notorious that we deem it needless to do more than state, with great brevity, the following leading grounds upon which its immediate repeal is deemed by us to be a measure of justice clearly due to the stockholders.

1. The act was procured by the efforts of the men who, at the time of its passage, had succeeded in obtaining control of this corporation as its executive heads, with a Board of Directors selected substantially by themselves, and so subject to their influence as to give to them practically the whole power of management and unchecked control of the property and finances of the Company, and the manifest tendency of the classification scheme is to give permanency to the position of these parties. Assuming the great majority of the shareholders to be desirous of changing the management, it would, under the working of this act, be impossible for them, even under the most favorable conditions, to accomplish such change short of three successive annual elections; and, practically, it would be almost, if not quite impossible for the shareholders, however great their unanimity of purpose, to effect the change satisfactorily even in that time, because of the impossibility of inducing men of the requisite character and ability to accept at the first and second annual elections, the position of directors, which would place them in a small and powerless minority in a hostile board, wholly controlled by the present managers, and put them in the miserable position of apparent responsibility for the continuance of wrongs and evils which they could really do nothing to prevent or correct.

2. It is and always has been the general policy of the law, and almost universal practice in this State to afford to the shareholders of corporations at each annual election an opportunity for changing the management by electing an entirely new Board of Directors if they so desire, the chief reason usually assigned by the advocates of the contrary policy of classification of the directors with long terms of office, is the prevention thereby of sinister attempts to obtain the control of a company by combinations secretly formed for the purpose, and operating as a surprise upon a great proportion of the shareholders, who, content with the existing management, fail to attend the election because of ignorance of any intended change or expected contest. It is plain that no such considerations can be applicable in the present case. The issue is sharply defined between the present managers of the Company and the great body of bona fide shareholders who desire to turn them out, and the real question is whether a fair opportunity for trying that issue shall be afforded.

3. The present leading managers of the Erie Railway Company, from the time when they came into power in 1868, have had unchecked control, and managed its affairs to suit their pleasure. Whatever results have been attained have been their work, and to them is attributable whatever of praise or blame is due to such results. In order to see whether or not there is ground for complaint by the shareholders against the conduct of these managers, we ask attention to the following very brief summary of results they have accomplished, which mostly appear from official reports made to the State Engineer and Surveyor:

In February, 1868, the common stock was about	$24,250,000
Preferred stock about	8,500,000
Funded debt about	22,500,000
At date of last published annual report in 1869, the common stock about	78,500,000
Preferred stock about	8,500,000
Funded debt about	23,400,000

Thus these managers, in less than two years, made more than $50,000,000 of increase to the share capital, besides an increase of the debt; while by the reports they do not even profess to show more than $6,300,000 expended in permanent improvements of and additions to the road and its appurtenances, and, notwithstanding the immense increase of capital, their reports show the net receipts for the years ending September, 1868, and September, 1869, to be for one year $930,000 less, and in the other year $700,000 less than in the year ending September, 1867; and as a consequence the payment even of dividends upon preferred stock has been stopped, and the chance of ever getting a dividend upon the common stock under the present management appears to be altogether hopeless.

The shareholders find nothing of substance to show for the fifty odd millions increase of capital, and as a natural result the common stock has fallen from the price of between seventy and eighty per cent., which it bore when these managers came into power, to less than twenty-five per cent. The preferred stock has fallen to less than fifty per cent., and even the mortgage bonds, owing to the great general distrust of the present management, have fallen below par. And in addition to $50,000,000 increase of capital above mentioned, there has been a subsequent increase of several millions.

We submit that in view of the results which these managers have accomplished, it is eminently fit that the shareholders should speedily have an opportunity of a fair election, to express their opinion of the past conduct of these their servants, and to exercise effectively their choice whether to continue the present management of this Company, or to make such complete changes in it as they may desire.

We therefore ask for such legislation as shall give such opportunity, trusting that our appeal to the sovereign power of the State of New-York for this measure of justice will not be in vain.

Mr. W. O. Bartlett and Judge Barnard.

From the Brooklyn Eagle, Feb. 10.

If there must be personal journalism the avowed and candid kind is to be preferred. The man who insists on keeping the public informed of his individual experience—telling it what he does and what he thinks, rather than seeking to represent any phase of popular sentiment, and obtruding his relatively insignificant self in place of the efficient, impersonal force of aggregated opinion—at least deals fairly with the public when he honestly signs his name to his articles.

* * * Not to multiply examples, it will be seen that Mr. W. O. BARTLETT relied on an abundance of those precedents without which no prudent lawyer goes into Court, when he threw off all impersonal disguise in availing himself of his editorial facilities to defend his legal character and conduct. His frankness in printing his name after the "card," which appears as a leading article in today's Sun, is worthy of high praise. Having thus plunged into personality, he makes very thorough work of it. Besides magnifying himself as a man, a lawyer, and a journalist, he certifies to the genius, talent and purity of his son, and impartially distributes first-rate notices among his friends, the Judges. He says he never heard Judge BARNARD "utter a sentiment which would have been discreditable to Chief-Justice MARSHALL." Without inquiring into the graver questions suggested by the parallel, it may be asked whether the most lively imagination can conceive of MARSHALL holding "Chambers" in the fashion with which BARNARD has disgusted members of the Bar who have any respect for the Bench. Could the eminent Chief-Justice ever have so far forgotten judicial dignity as to make, in open Court, so gross an attack upon a dead man as BARNARD shocked the general sense of decency by making upon Mr. RAYMOND!—whom, by the way, helpless to defend himself, BARTLETT appropriates as an object of patronage, and says: "When he died, I wrote what I think was the most heart-felt tribute published to his memory." Were his tone not severely serious throughout, we might suspect BARTLETT of sarcasm in his eulogy of BARNARD, especially as he supplements it with an extract from Judge CARDOZO'S estimate of his own purity of character, as BARTLETT heard him pronounce it, to the effect that it was "no merit in him (CARDOZO) to decide a case according to the law and evidence," and that he (CARDOZO) could not "conceive of a Judge doing otherwise." This self-certificate of virtue is alike conclusive and captivating for its fullness, its humility and its charming simplicity. Having established a claim of gratitude upon the Bench by asserting its integrity, BARTLETT proceeds to collect the debt by demanding that Judge WOODRUFF shall disprove the charge that he (BARTLETT) has ever been "obsequious" in language or conduct toward Judges. BARTLETT has so completely disposed of the question in this very article by his attitude toward the judicial department of the Erie Railway Company, that it is hardly worth while for Judge WOODRUFF to interfere. The reference to the Bench is all in BARTLETT'S card in which the public has any concern. The bit of gossip relative to the tender of the French Mission to JAMES GORDON BENNETT by LINCOLN—BARTLETT says he carried the autograph letter containing the offer from the President to the editor—is curious, but his account of how he procured the Kossuth correspondence for Mr. RAYMOND of the TIMES, his consignment of "a bald-headed member of the Bar Association" to "physical fire and brimstone" for uttering an alleged "atrocious falsehood" regarding BARTLETT and BARNARD, and his characterization of his own son as an "industrious, careful and conscientious young lawyer," are really of the slightest consequence. BARTLETT concludes by setting forth his own industry, studiousness, and attainments as a lawyer, and refers with pride to his familiarity with COKE, BLACKSTONE, HOLT, HALE, ELDON, STORY, KENT, and others eminent in the literature of jurisprudence. If he has read their works, he knows that one of them has forcibly said that "the law is a jealous mistress, and will bear no rival." Acting on this wise admonition, BARTLETT would have confined himself to the Courts and his clients, would not have confounded a counselor's office with an editorial room, would have been content with the successful pursuit of the legal profession instead of trying to combine with it the distinct and incongruous profession of journalism, and would have seen, much more clearly than he now seems to see, that the lawyer who divides his time between the causes before certain Judges and writing eulogistic articles on the same Judges for the newspapers, inevitably invites the criticism of which BARTLETT complains.

Stewart's Exhibition.

Owing to the inclemency of the weather on Thursday, which prevented many persons from viewing the splendid exhibition of textile fabrics at STEWART'S upper store, the display did not end last night, as was the intention, but the store will be kept open until 9 o'clock this evening, thus affording the public an opportunity to view one of the most splendid spectacles ever presented in this or any other country.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES.

SUNDAY EDITION.

On Sunday next the Sunday edition of the TIMES will contain many special articles of great interest to all classes of readers, and a general variety of good reading matter unsurpassed by any newspaper of the day.

The popular series of "RAMBLES, BY ISAAC IDLER," will be continued—the article for Sunday being descriptive of a journey of "TWO DAYS UNDERGROUND." Other papers will follow on successive Sundays, and will comprise some curious local sketches, as well as a description of some remarkable EAST INDIAN FESTIVALS—including the Festival of Juggernaut and the Swinging Festival. These Rambles will be continued as regularly as possible throughout the year.

We shall also publish on Sunday an interesting article on VALENTINES, explaining their history, showing the extent and character of the trade, and giving many curious particulars about the use of these curiosities of modern correspondence.

The LITERARY SELECTIONS will be gleaned from the very best sources, and will contain this week some extracts of remarkable interest.

A correspondence on the MARRIAGE DOWRY question, from a number of readers of the TIMES, will be published in our Sunday edition. Letters which reach us by Saturday afternoon on this subject will be in time for insertion.

The latest FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC NEWS will be given in this journal, and a complete summary of DRAMATIC INTELLIGENCE, relating to events at home and abroad. This summary is always fuller and more accurate than can be found in any other paper.

The other departments, which have become popular features of the Sunday paper, the NOTES AND COMMENTS, paragraphs on quaint and curious topics discovered in the papers of the day, FINE ARTS criticisms and notices, &c., &c., will also be up to the usual standard.

Advertisers will find this paper the best medium for bringing their notices under the attention of families, as it has a large circulation among the most intelligent classes. Advertisers will send in their notices before 8½ this evening to insure proper classification.

Those who have read the Sunday issues of the TIMES need not to be reminded of the fact that they are richly worth buying. They are free from the sensational and otherwise objectionable features that are too common in Sunday papers, and they contain a most judicious and pleasing selection of the best things in current periodical literature, excellent stories, able discussions of social, moral and religious questions, and fresh and lively pictures of most interesting phases of life in the Metropolis. The paper is a model of good arrangement and good taste, and presents nothing that should be kept out from the family circle, 1868, and September, 1869, to be for one year $930,000 less, and in the other year $700,000 less than in the year ending September, 1867; and as a consequence the payment even of dividends upon preferred stock has been stopped, and the chance of ever getting a dividend upon the common stock under the present management appears to be altogether hopeless.

Because a Person has a Bad Cough it should not be inferred that consumption has set in, although a case of consumption is rarely met with unaccompanied by a distressing cough. Where, however, a disposition to pulmonary disease exists, a cough, if left to itself, strains and racks the lungs, and wastes the general strength, and soon establishes an incurable complaint. In all cases, then, it is the safer plan to get rid of a cough, cold, or hoarseness, without delay, and for this purpose no remedy acts more promptly or surely, or with more benefit to the organs of the chest than Dr. D. JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, an article scientifically compounded from carefully selected drugs, and which, on trial, will always be found worthy of its world-wide reputation. Sold by all druggists.

For Throat Diseases and Affections of the chest, BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES, or Cough Lozenges, are of great value. In Coughs, Irritation of the Throat caused by cold, or Unusual Exertion of the vocal organs, in speaking in public, or singing, they produce the most beneficial results. The Troches have proved their efficacy.

FALLEN PARIS.

The Last Sunday in the Unconquered Capital.

The correspondent of the London Times in Paris wrote on Jan. 23: "Yesterday afternoon, along the principal line of boulevards, it was not easy to make one's way through the thick crowd of well-dressed loungers enjoying their usual Sunday promenade as composedly as if there were no shells or short-commons to disturb the ordinary routine of their life. The cafés were filled with guests, discussing, over absinthe or beer, busily, but with less vehemence than might have been expected from French politicians at such a crisis, the downfall of TROCHU and the hopes entertained of the more energetic VINOY. At the Theatre Francais a large audience was listening to one of MOLIERE's master-pieces, too absorbed to notice the frequent and now familiar explosions which filled up the pauses between the speeches of the actors. Masses of infantry lined both sides of the Champs Elysées, making the passers-by believe that the new Commander-in-Chief was resolved to make up for lost time, and that another sortie was already imminent, despite the crushing failure of the last. Nobody had probably a suspicion that at that very moment the troops were waited for service scarcely a mile off, in the heart of Paris, and that French bullets got ready against the Prussians were piercing French hearts. While one party of citizens were applauding 'Tartuffe,' another were shooting each other from window and doorway across the open space in front of the Hotel de Ville. All the time the Prussian bombs, as if to supply the key to the strange scenes enacting in Paris, and the answering cannon of the forts, made themselves almost continuously heard. A quarter of an hour's walk from the Boulevards or the Theatre Francais would have brought one within reach of the falling shells. To complete the picture, I ought not to forget the silent, worn-out crowds, composed principally of women, waiting wearily but patiently before the doors of some butcher's or baker's shop until their turn at last came round to get their pittance of meat or bread."

The Riots—Capture of Mazas and Delivery of Flourens—A Sullied Page in the History of the Siege.

The Paris correspondence of the Pall Mall Gazette, dated Jan. 23, supplies the most coherent account of the capture of Mazas, and the subsequent disturbances. It runs thus: "The capture of Mazas by the gentlemen of the Commune will not rival the taking of the Bastile. This morning we have the whole account of the affair from an eye-witness, who relates how the Governor of the prison, on hearing of the arrival of the rioters, and that three delegates desired to speak with him, finally went out to parley with the multitude, which demanded the release of GUSTAVE FLOURENS. While the Governor was parleying, much to the disgust of the Captain of the National Guards who commanded the garrison, and desired to resist, one of the insurgents quietly took the keys out of the conciergerie's room and opened the large gates. The Commune immediately rushed in, and M. BAYET, the Governor, politely pointed out the room where FLOURENS was confined. The door was opened, and the celebrated Major, dressed in full uniform, found himself in the arms of les frères et amis, who embraced him. FLOURENS, however, objected to leave Mazas before his fellow-prisoners had been liberated, and the obsequious Governor, candle in hand, lighted the way to the cells where LAO MELLIER, RAUSAS and other political prisoners were incarcerated. When these worthies had been set free, the Commune returned in triumph to Belleville, and no doubt celebrated its successful raid in the usual manner. Work of a more serious nature took place at the Hotel de Ville, which fortunately was prepared for an attack. About 1 o'clock a couple of hundred rioters, most of them in the uniform of the National Guard, came along the Rue de Rivoli, loaded their muskets, and marched up to the Hotel de Ville. One of the gates opened, and a dozen Mobile Guards made their appearance; both parties brought their weapons up to their shoulders, but a sudden panic seized on the rioters, and they fled in company with some spectators, who began to think matters were looking serious. The fugitives rallied near the bridge before Notre Dame, and returning on the Rue de Rivoli, came into line on the pavement, crying 'Vive la Commune! A bas les Bretons!' These misguided and determined men were addressed by an officer of the National Guard, and retired. It was hoped that the émeute was over, but about 3 o'clock another body of rioters made its appearance, coming down the Rue du Temple, shouting 'A bas Trochu! Vive la Commune!' The men drew up in front of the Hotel de Ville and endeavored to tear down the railings. Three Breton officers went out, and from behind the railing asked the rioters what they wanted. 'Will your men fire on the people?' said a man in the uniform of an officer of the National Guard. To this Col. VABRE answered that his men would not fire while they were parleying. The men of the Commune were not so partisan-like for Col. VABRE had hardly uttered these words when the rioters fired on him and his friends, and wounded one of the officers in three places. The Colonel and Commandant tried to re-enter the Hotel de Ville, but could not open the door, and several shots were fired at them, which fortunately did not take effect. Happily, the Mobiles quartered in the Hotel de Ville opened fire from the windows, and soon threw the rioters into confusion; they beat a hasty retreat, but continued to keep up a fire on the Hotel de Ville from a distance, and behind corners. Action on the firing had lasted half an hour, a white flag was exhibited on the Place de Grêve, and an officer of the National Guard, with a yard of white calico at the end of his sword, implored both sides to cease firing. The façade of the Hotel de Ville had been pitted with bullets, and the hands of the clock, struck by a projectile, stood still at 3½ P. M. When the firing ceased, some 100 bodies strewed the ground, but most of them got up and ran away when the noise of musketry stopped. However, several men were killed, and among the slain was an officer, supposed to be the Ex-Commandant SAPPIA, dismissed the service a couple of months ago. The dead were quickly removed, and sand was thrown over the pools of blood in the Place de Grêve. When the battle was over, strong reinforcements arrived, and in a very short time Paris was swarming with troops, which had been called out for fear of another attempt being made to disturb the peace and unseat the Government. In the evening M. JULES FERRY, Maire of Paris, issued a circular to the other Maires and the commanders of districts, in which he said that some factious National Guards of the One Hundred and First Battalion had attempted to take the Hotel de Ville, which had been fired at from the opposite houses, occupied beforehand by the rebels. 'Bombs,' says the Maire, 'and explosive balls were fired at us. The aggression was of the most odious and cowardly description from beginning to end, as first of all a Colonel and two officers were fired on when parleying, and afterward, when we had ceased firing, muskets were discharged at us from the houses in front of the Hotel de Ville.' M. JULES FERRY regrets that glorious and unhappy Paris should have been exposed to such an attack, which, 'as cowardly as it was foolish, has sullied so pure a page.'"

INFALLIBILITY.

Hyacinthe and the Catholic Bishops.

The Liberté publishes an appeal from Father HYACINTHE to the Catholic Bishops, in which he says that two systems of absolutism which weighed upon the Church and the temporal world have passed away. He enumerates the arts employed by the partisans of infallibility, and points out that the principal question in France is a religious one. Father HYACINTHE does not acknowledge the validity of the last encyclicals and syllabus, and describes them as unworthy of a free and great people. He also disapproves of the abuse of hierarchical power, and wishes to abolish priestly celibacy. Finally, the Father expresses a wish to remain in the Catholic faith.

NEAPOLITAN TRAGEDY.

Two Men Stabbed to Death—Jealousy the Motive of the Crime.

A correspondent at Florence, in a letter of Jan. 24, sends the Pall Mall Gazette particulars of a terrible tragedy which has just occurred at Naples: "On the 20th, Prince TEORA, a Neapolitan nobleman, was returning home from a banquet late at night in the company of one of his friends, Prince MALISSENA, to whom he proposed a nocturnal visit to Vesuvius, in order to see the eruption. MALISSENA, somewhat startled by the singular proposal, as well as by the unusually excited state in which his friend appeared, but attributing it to the effects of drink, accepted the invitation. The friends thereupon hired an open cabriolet and drove out of the gates. On a sudden, however, Prince TEORA changed his mind and insisted on returning to Naples. His friend consented, probably because he deemed it unadvisable to oppose this new vagary, and perhaps also because he preferred town to country under the circumstances. So back they went, the Prince proceeding to his stables, at a short distance from his palace; and after the Prince had spoken to his coachman, the two noblemen directed their steps toward Palazzo Teora, near Porta Siramsana. On a sudden the Prince left his friend's arm, pounced at one bound on a man who appeared to be waiting before the palace, and stabbed him with his dagger, receiving at the same moment, however, from the attacked individual in one of his eyes a stab of such violence that the dagger literally passed through his head, coming out by the back of his neck; both fell dead instantaneously. The Prince's victim was ultimately found to be a certain Signor STETTLER, son of a Swiss officer, formerly in the service of the Bourbons. Both weapons were sword-sticks. The profound mystery in which the motives of this horrible event were shrouded at first is gradually clearing off. The day previous to the crime the Prince had seen the same Signor STETTLER in his wife's box in the theatre of San Carlo. A letter he had received from a vindictive lady's maid, who had shortly before been dismissed by the Princess, had already aroused his jealousy, although there seems to have been not the slightest motive in reality for it beyond this communication, of which the source was, to say the least, suspicious. The Princess, it is said, (a young lady of the greatest beauty,) enjoys the most unblemished reputation for virtue and modesty. It appears that the Prince had questioned his coachman, whose information concerning the direction which Signor STETTLER had taken toward the Prince's palace confirmed his ill-founded suspicion, and on seeing him before his door he was no longer able to control himself. The whole town attended the funeral of the Prince, which took place with great pomp and splendor the day before yesterday."

THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

De Palladines' Denunciation.

The Gaulois publishes the following reply, which, it states, was sent by Gen. D'AURELLES DE PALLADINES to GAMBETTA, on receiving hisrequest that the General would resume the command of the Army of the Loire: "Monsieur le Ministre,—I have had the honor of receiving your letter by express. I place my country before everything; and notwithstanding the annoyances and the disgust which I have experienced, I am ready to resume the command of a corps d'armée. But I will not hold this command save under a regular Government, whose first act shall have been to bring to trial the ambitious and incapable men who have destroyed France. Receive, Monsieur le Ministre, the assurance of my deep consideration.—D'AURELLES DE PALLADINES."

ANTE BELLUM.

"Why Napoleon Went to War"—A Record of Untold Incidents.

"Azamat Batuk," who has long been a correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette at the seat of war, supplies the issue of that journal, dated Jan. 27, with an interesting article under the head "How NAPOLEON Went to War." The writer had an opportunity of spending a fortnight among the Imperialists, whom the fall of Sedan had thrown into Belgium, and he thinks an account of what he heard and saw there may not be worthless. He then says: "Truly speaking, stale news is often the only news worth having; fresh news is seldom accurate. So, for instance, in July all the telegrams and correspondence tended to show that it was the Emperor who began the war, and it was he alone who threw France into the subsequent disasters. Yet some day it will appear that such was not the case. The Emperor was one of the worst rulers that ever existed—one of the men least fitted both by his personal qualifications and his origin to sit upon the Imperial throne of one of the first nations in the world. But as regards the war, he is much more innocent in it than the Imperial courtiers and the population of Paris. True, he had created the shameful Tuileries Court, and made the population of Paris what it was four months ago—after twenty years of Imperial rule. But then the truth requires it to be said that if the elements for forming such a Court and such a population were not inherent in the people itself, one man could never have made them, still less a man with the capacities of NAPOLEON III. Almost the same language as the Countess of PAGNIE held was employed by the Countess of POURTALES, a thoroughly French lady by birth, daughter of the same Baron of BUSSIERE whom the Prussians still keep in prison for no other reason than, having married his daughter to a German, he did not himself become a servant of the Berlin Cabinet. Now, the Countess of POURTALES has always been too near to the Tuileries to remain silent, and her celebrated letter to Gen. DUCROT, which the General quoted afterwards when writing to TROCHU, clearly shows in what sense she must have spoken to the Empress. In one word, NAPOLEON knew—at any rate, he had a very confident expectation—that he would never see Paris again. He had been urged into war by the Court, who constantly frightened him with the bugbear of the growth of the Republican party, which had shown itself so formidable at the time of the plebiscite, and he, in order to get rid of the latter, had, by the people of Paris, from whom, after King WILLIAM had repeated to BENEDETTI at Ems the celebrated word of CAMBRONNE, the preservation of the Empire could be bought only at the price of yielding to their cries of 'à Berlin!' That NAPOLEON was quite prepared for a disaster is obvious not only from what he was told, but from the preparations and the arrangements he made. From the moment of the declaration of war he never slept. I heard that in the month of July he caressed his son more than he had done in the whole of the child's life. He is believed to have taken him to the Army of the Rhine from a dread of being separated from him in any great disaster. It was only when the command was no longer in the Emperor's hands that he gave up (so his friends declare) the idea of carrying the child with himself under actual fire. His personal courage proved, however, the Emperor's opinions as to the results of the campaign he was then entering upon. When the Tuileries had been invaded after the proclamation of the Republic, the absence of many things known to have been there formerly showed what measures had been taken. The so-called jewels of the Crown had all been deposited in the Bank of France, but not a single piece of jewelry belonging personally to the Empress was left to be seen. Surprise was supposed to have taken all away, but then the silver plate had also disappeared. The magnificent gold and silver table services presented to the Emperor by the Sultan, the Czar ALEXANDER and the Viceroy of Egypt, were all gone. The splendid cradle of the Prince Imperial, presented by the town of Lyons, was also not to be found. The magnificent collections of treasures of art which NAPOLEON had accumulated at the palaces of St. Cloud and Compiegne were also no longer to be seen. All these had been removed long ago. From the very day when war had been declared the railway stations of the Nord, of Strasbourg, and of Orleans, (for Spain,) were crammed with gigantic boxes bearing away to various destinations the 'personal' property of the imperial family, and one cannot help asking oneself how it is that nothing of this has found its way to public notice. When Marshal MCMAHON arrived at Marseilles from Africa he declared to his wife that he considered France as utterly lost, and that he took the command of his corps with the heavy heart of a soldier who knew that his future was ruined. Those who knew of this conversation accused MCMAHON of 'antiquity.' When he arrived at Paris he was closeted for hours with the Emperor, and frankly told him his opinion. The accusations became still stronger, and the postponement of NAPOLEON's departure for twelve days—the consequence of this conversation—was attributed solely to the Emperor's illness. The Empress herself did not apparently share the Emperor's ideas. At the farewell family dinner at St. Cloud she arranged with the chef de musique of the Grenadiers de la Garde to play the 'Marseillaise' as an agreeable surprise to the Emperor; and it was only when she saw the Emperor turning quite pale that she stopped the music and burst into tears. At that moment she seems to have recognized the truth. She gave up the idea of insisting upon the Emperor's starting in parade through Paris, and took him herself to the railway station of the Palace of St. Cloud. Nothing of all this attracted in the least the attention either of the Court or of the people, nor had we the slightest idea of it when we saw the brilliant arrival of the Emperor at Metz."

ENGLAND.

The English People and Princess Louise.

From the Spectator, Jan. 28.

There is something very perplexing, and to us at least not a little irritating, in the sudden outbreak of popular feeling against the marriage of the Princess LOUISE, an outbreak so bitter that it may yet provoke a discreditable scene in the House of Commons. In every great borough the first question asked of a representative is whether he intends to vote against the grant of a dowry to the Princess, and a reply in the negative very often evokes an unmistakable hiss. Mr. FORSTER, at Bradford, turned the subject with the happy mot that he could not fine the Princess for marrying a Scotchman, but at Halifax Mr. STANSFELD was pestered with the question, at Chelsea the members nearly lost the usual vote because they would not clear themselves upon the matter, at Brighton both members stand pledged to vote against the grant, and in every metropolitan constituency the subject is as embarrassing as the Permissive bill, or the Contagious Diseases act, or any other topic upon which there is a misunderstanding between the electorate and the political classes. What in the world does it all mean? What has the clever Princess done, or what is she about to do, that she should be treated with this exceeding discourtesy, her name bandied about by all manner of lips, and her settlement criticised as if she were a pauper applying for two shillings a week and a loaf a day, and suspected of hoarding money? Of course the taxpayers have a right to discuss any grant submitted to Parliament—nobody questions that—but it is possible to exercise any right in an atrociously petty and stupid way, and that, with all respect for them, is the way in which they are exercising this one. Possibly that may be the fault of local orators, who know that they are giving expression to a latent and indefinite discontent, but do not know how to put their case on any intelligible grounds; but it is most perplexing and annoying to see how readily the householders, just invested with power, join in an insulting and unreasonable, and, above all, a trumpery complaint. They do not even take the trouble to make the grounds of their ill-feeling clear. Are their members to resist the dowry because the electors dislike the marriage? That would be intelligible and just, the electors having a distinct interest in the marriage of any one within the line of the succession, but there is no trace of any feeling of the kind. The German Princes, it is believed, with the Kaiser at their head, condemn the alliance as derogatory to the royal caste, and declare that they will not receive the Marquis of LORNE any more than the Marquis RAFALLO, but the English electors certainly do not sympathize with the HOHENZOLLERN pride. As little are they in accord with the feeling of the Peers, who see a new order of nobles introduced between them and the throne; or with the philosophic constitutionalists, who feel that monarchy is weakened whenever the Brahminnike sanctity of the royal caste suffers a derogation. That notion is much more widely diffused than the Court is quite aware, but that is certainly not shared by the people who hurl these questions at representatives who are half ashamed to offer a reply. If the noise had been confined to London we should have said it was a mere expression of a temporary irritation against the Sovereign, of very little political or even social importance. There is no doubt that in her capital Queen VICTORIA has at last exhausted her long-enduring popularity with the masses. They think it her Majesty's duty to live in her capital, to be the visible chief of her realm; and they resent her preference for remote wildernesses and her abhorrence of city life as a dereliction of duty. That feeling, however, is confined to London, and it is out of London that the opposition to the Princess' dowry is fiercest and most loud.

HAVANA MAIL NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM-SHIP COLUMBIA.

The steam-ship Columbia, which left Havana Feb. 4, reached this port yesterday. We are once more under obligations to Purser MAGNA for the prompt delivery of our Havana correspondence, which, however, we cannot find space for this morning. The news it embodies throws no stronger light on the situation of affairs than the latest telegrams printed in the TIMES.

Ten Years' Imprisonment for a Young Female Incendiary.

The trial of MINNIE DAVIS, a young and rather good-looking woman, indicted for arson, in having set fire to her trunk for the purpose of obtaining $2,000 insurance money, was resumed before Recorder HACKETT, at the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, and was watched with absorbing interest by the spectators in attendance. Mr. G. HAGEDORN testified to the alarm on Christmas night, and the fire in his house. Fire-Marshal MCSPEDON testified that he visited Mr. HAGEDORN's house on the morning after the fire, and found there packages in the sitting-room into which the accused had gathered up her effects on the evening before the fire. Mrs. HAGEDORN was recalled, and she testified that the prisoner's entire property was not, in her estimation, worth more than $300. On cross-examination the witness testified that she drew pension money as the widow of a soldier named BROWN, who was killed in the war, after becoming married to Mr. HAGEDORN. During the summing-up argument of the counsel for the defense MINNIE DAVIS wept freely, and was removed from the Court-room after becoming hysterical. The jury found her guilty of arson in the first degree, and recommended her to mercy. Recorder HACKETT subsequently sent her to State Prison for ten years.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

At the Exchange, yesterday, (Feb. 9,) E. H. LUDLOW & CO. made the only sales of the day, as follows: By order of W. R. MCCREADY et al., executors of ANN MCCREADY, deceased, the firm disposed of the premises known as No. 81 Maiden-lane, comprising a three-story and cellar brick store, together with a lot 25.11x about 94 feet. The building covers the entire lot, and is rented at the rate of $1,900 per annum. The property was sold to SAMUEL G. MCCOTTER for $18,700—a very low figure. At a sale in partition, to close the estate of R. R. MORRIS, deceased, Messrs. LUDLOW & Co. offered some desirable property located respectively in this City and Brooklyn. The property in the last-named city alone was sold, however, that in New-York being withdrawn. It embraced two four-story brick houses and lots adjoining each other, situated on the north side of Atlantic-street, Brooklyn, 75 feet west of Court-street. They were both purchased by G. L. STITMER for $18,500 each—a price considered by those present as extremely reasonable. The New-York property offered and withdrawn, embraced a five-story store and lot, 27x45, No. 21 Coenties-slip, rental, $2,400 per year; also the property located on the southwest corner of Greenwich and Morris streets, a plot of ground 51.4 by about 60 feet, upon which are erected three four-story buildings, known as Nos. 37 and 39 Greenwich and No. 9 Morris street. The premises are leased at the rate of $4,350 per annum. For the last-named property $30,000 was bid, and for the first $18,500, but, as has been said, both pieces were withdrawn by the auctioneers, the estimated valuation being placed at a much higher figure. No other transactions were effected. The list of sales for next week, some of which are of importance, will appear, as usual, in this column on Monday.

TUESDAY, Feb. 14, at 12 o'clock, at Exchange Sales-room, No. 111 Broadway, New-York: POSITIVE SALE to close estate of Samuel W. Slocum, deceased—two valuable three-story attic and cellar brick houses, Nos. 161 and 163 Adelphi-st., Brooklyn, near Willoughby-av. Particulars at offices of auctioneers.

REAL ESTATE AT AUCTION.

TO MANUFACTURERS.—ASSIGNEE'S SALE IN BANKRUPTCY.—District Court of the United States, District of New-Jersey. In the matter of THE ELIZABETHTOWN STEAM MANUFACTURING COMPANY, bankrupt.
The undersigned will sell at public auction, on the premises heretofore occupied by said Bankrupt Corporation at Elizabethport, N. J., on MONDAY, the 20th day of February, A. D. 1871, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the entire valuable real estate of said Corporation, consisting of—1st—A tract comprising twelve lots between Water and South sts., 147x289 feet, with front on both streets.
2d—The saw-mill property, including lock, canal and basins, with ample yard room and sheds for storage. The mill is fully equipped, of large capacity, and in condition for immediate operation. This property has a frontage on the Elizabeth Creek of about 270 feet, with substantial and capacious docks; the mill has been profitably operated for years, and controls an extensive and lucrative trade.
3d—The wheel factory, a plot of ground on 1st-st., 175x120 feet, with two substantial frame-work shops, 36x82 and 26x62 feet, well adapted for wood work of any description.
4th—The Spoke Mills, consisting of a plot of ground, 270x275 feet, with front on the creek of about 278 feet, on which are substantial docks with sufficient water for vessels of 100 tons. The buildings consist of a new frame factory with slate roof, built with special reference to strength and stability, 35x157, with ample engine-room addition and engine of large capacity, with shafting and connections, all of the best and most modern construction, and in complete order for immediate use. Also, frame warehouse and office building, slate roof, 42x100, with spacious sheds and storage room.
5th—A tract on 1st-st., 125 feet by about 360 feet, running through to Elizabeth Creek.
6th—A tract, 100 feet by about 358 feet, next westerly of the last-mentioned.
7th—A tract, 100 feet by about 330 feet, next westerly of the last-mentioned.
8th—A tract, 100 feet by about 302 feet, next westerly of the last-mentioned.
9th—A tract, 100 feet by about 284 feet, next westerly of the last-mentioned.
10th—A tract, 85 feet by about 275 feet, with front on the creek of about 275 feet.
Each of these tracts possesses a front upon Elizabeth Creek, which is navigable for vessels of moderate draught, and the locality possessing the amplest facilities for water and railway communication, presents unusual advantages for manufacturing operations of any description.
Also, 5 lots, Nos. 21, 22, 24, 26 and 28, and gores of lots Nos. 19 and 20, situate between Marshall and Franklin sts., and designated by the above numbers on Block No. 49, on a map of the new manufacturing town of Elizabethport, on file in the office of the Register of the County of Essex, New

NOTICE TO TRAVELERS.
Families or gentlemen going to travel on the Continent of Europe, who can afford the expense of a courier, should never leave Paris without one; their services are invaluable in relieving the traveler from the multiplicity of cares and troubles respecting passports, examination and conveyance of luggage; in securing the best accommodation, in protecting the traveler from imposition, and an infinity of annoyances to which they are exposed in various parts of the Continent. Competent and trustworthy couriers and traveling servants may always be obtained by applying to the COURIER SOCIETY, No. 3 Rue d'Antin, near the Tuileries Garden, Paris.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, Feb. 4, 1871.
PUBLIC NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that books will be opened on the 6th day of March next, in this country and in Europe, for subscriptions to the national loan, under the act approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the Refunding of the National Debt," and the act in amendment thereof, approved Jan. 20, 1871.
The places at which subscriptions may be made, and the names of the authorized agents of the Government, will be announced hereafter. The proposed loan comprises three classes of bonds, namely:
First—Bonds to the amount of five hundred millions of dollars, payable in coin, at the pleasure of the United States, after ten years from the date of their issue, and bearing interest, payable quarterly in coin, at the rate of four and a half per cent. per annum.
Second—Bonds to the amount of three hundred millions of dollars, payable in coin, at the pleasure of the United States, after fifteen years from the date of their issue, and bearing interest, payable quarterly in coin, at the rate of four per cent. per annum.
Third—Bonds to the amount of seven hundred millions of dollars, payable in coin, at the pleasure of the United States, after thirty years from the date of their issue, and bearing interest, payable quarterly in coin, at the rate of four per cent. per annum.
Subscribers to the loan will have preference in the following order, namely:
First—Subscribers for equal amounts of each class of bonds.
Second—Subscribers for equal amounts of bonds bearing interest at the rate of four and a half per cent. and of bonds bearing interest at the rate of five per cent.
Third—Subscribers for five per cent. bonds.
When a subscription is made the subscriber will be required to deposit two per cent. of the amount therefor, to be accounted for by the Government when the bonds are delivered; and payment may be made either in coin or in bonds of the United States known as Five-twenty bonds, at their par value. The coin received in payment will be applied to the redemption of five-twenty bonds.
The bonds will be registered or issued with coupons, as may be desired by subscribers. Registered bonds will be issued of the denominations of $50, $100, $500, $1,000, $5,000, and $10,000; and coupon bonds of each denomination except the last two. The interest will be payable in the United States, at the office of the Treasurer, any Assistant Treasurer, or Designated Depositary of the Government.
The bonds of the several classes aforesaid, and the interest thereon, are exempt from the payment of all taxes or dues of the United States, as well as from any taxation in form by or under State, municipal, or local authority.
After maturity, the bonds last issued will be first redeemed, by classes and numbers, as may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury.
GEO. S. BOUTWELL,
Secretary of the Treasury.

COMPLETION
OF THE
Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railway.
THE FIRST MORTGAGE
7 per Ct. Gold Bonds,
COUPON OR REGISTERED,
FREE OF U. S. TAX,
Principal and Interest Payable in Gold.
ON A FINISHED ROAD,
FOR SALE AT
90 and Accrued Interest in Currency.

The last rail of this important road was laid on the 26th of January, thus completing the enterprise and establishing a connection between St. Paul and St. Louis ninety miles shorter than any existing route, and sixty-five miles shorter than any contemplated route between the same points.
By this line also the distance from Chicago to the great grain fields of Minnesota is shortened 45 miles, and transportation proportionately quickened and cheapened. The First Mortgage Bonds assume, therefore, at once on the completion of the line a position equal in intrinsic value to those of the Fort Wayne, Pennsylvania Central, Illinois Central or any other First Mortgage Bonds of completed trunk lines—not one of which sell below par.
The B., C. R. & M. Bonds are a First Mortgage, amounting only to $20,000 per mile on a line of road which has cost $40,000 per mile; the balance having been supplied by liberal subscriptions to the stock at par, made by wealthy farmers and parties interested along the line, and by similar subscriptions on the part of Towns and Counties through which the Road passes, which have adopted this system of giving their aid rather than issuing Town and County Bonds.
The earnings of the Road in its incomplete state, and while deprived entirely of through connection, have been for the past three months in excess of 12 per cent. on the amount of the Mortgage Bonds, after deducting operating expenses. No Road in the United States can show a better record during its inception. When is added to this lucrative way-traffic the profits which will arise from the transportation of the vast wheat crop of Northern Iowa and Southern Minnesota, all of which must seek a market over this line, the result cannot but be a showing which will give large Dividends on the Stock of the Company, after paying the interest to the Bondholders as heretofore. The privilege which attaches to the Bonds of conversion into Stock at par will shortly assume practical value, as by this privilege the Bondholders will, by the conversion, be entitled to share in any excess of earnings which may accrue to the Road.
A small amount, $400,000 in all, of the issue yet unsold are still offered at the subscription price of 90 and accrued interest in currency. Although the Company have warranted in the present condition of their affairs in advancing the price of their Bonds, yet they have considered it a condition for the present the subscription at the same price as heretofore, in order to effect rapid sales and thus free themselves immediately from all floating indebtedness.
All marketable securities taken in exchange free of commission and Express charges.

LEGAL SCIENCE.

The Theory of Judicial Determination—Fourth Lecture in the University Law Course.

The fourth lecture in the University Law Course was delivered last evening in the chapel of the University on "The Theory of Judicial Determination" by A. A. REDFIELD, Esq., a graduate of the University. The lecturer premised his address by expressing his conviction in the existence of a legal science; that questions of law were not determined according to the whim or caprice of a Judge, nor by the cajolery or persuasiveness of counsel; that the result of a lawsuit was not necessarily an extra hazardous risk against which no one was willing to insure, but that a lawyer, in advising a client, or a Judge in deciding a cause, proceeds, or ought to proceed, by processes of investigation, analysis and induction, as truly scientific in form and character as those by which a mathematician predicts the return of a comet. The needs of society from age to age necessitated the establishment of a body of conventional and artificial rules for the settlement of differences between man and man, which we call law, but which should not be mistaken for justice. Under this system it may indeed happen that justice is frequently frustrated, that here and there we have a corrupt Judge or an ignorant one, dangerous to the community in which he lives; but it might be frankly acknowledged that the amount of error and absurdity to be found in the law books is beyond calculation, and yet this system was to be accepted as the result and verdict of the collected wisdom of mankind. Citing a notable instance of the injustice of a decision recorded by a Scotch arbitrator, he remarked that though preposterous, as it appeared, it was by no means uncommon. The vital distinction between the theory of arbitration and the theory of judicial determination was that the former settled only a single controversy between particular individuals, while in a legal judgment the rendering of justice to the parties was not one-half the duty of the Court. That judgment should be rendered on principles so just and right that it could determine every other like case which might ever thereafter arise. He was safe in asserting that arbitration as a system would not for some generations to come support that system of municipal law, which in the long run would prove the safest standard by which our rights can be determined and our wrongs redressed. He defined a Court to consist of a Judge, Jury, and the Bar. The Judge and the members of the Bar should be possessed of a knowledge of the principles of a technical science, and, indeed, the spheres of both were more identical than would at first appear. The Judge in rendering a decision should look for enlightenment, instruction and right reason from the Bar of which he was a member, and it was upon the Bar, which was alone competent to estimate his abilities and probity, that the Judge should mainly rely for moral support, without which, especially in times of great popular excitement, or upon occasions of unpopular decisions, the judiciary would become the sport of the mob or the victim of a political conspiracy. Eminent Judges had borne testimony to the assistance they received from the arguments of counsel, and it was monstrously unnatural that both should ever stand in antagonism to each other. The science of law had a twofold purpose—one to furnish and declare the rule of action by which an individual was to govern himself as a member of the community, and the other was to furnish a system of machinery by which the infraction of that rule might be prevented, or, if not prevented, punished, and resulting injuries redressed. The distinction between statute and common law was unphilosophical, and the distinction between written and unwritten law was ridiculous to a degree. Law was not a fixed science. Its definitions were not fixed and determinate; a Judge never decided the general principles, but the case, and left us to infer the principles. One of the processes of judicial determination was to reduce dialectually from known principles a general rule of law, to strip from precedent cases all that was peculiar to them, so as to focus but as to forms of expression employed by the Judges, to look at the whole case or cases, and by abstraction and induction arrive at the ratio decidendi, or that general principle or ground at the foundation of all decisions upon the subject. On this basis he pointed out the action to be pursued by lawyers and Judges, citing several instances where it was to be departed from, according to the peculiar character of the case, arguing, with Lord COKE, that "reason was the life of the law—nay, the very law itself." The basis of all judicial reasoning was precedent, but it was liable to change with the needs and conditions of societies and generations. Entering into the practical consideration of the subject, he would not argue whether the Judge was justified in enforcing a law he deemed contrary to the law of God, or if his duty to deal honestly and fairly with lawyers and their clients. It was difficult to exaggerate the dignity and sacredness of the judicial office. There were those whose learning and virtue were examples for emulation; others, whose recklessness and indifference to the principles of law drew upon it confusion and uncertainty; and others again, so solicitous for popular applause as to sacrifice every honorable duty and win for themselves the contempt of mankind. Nothing was more essential to the character of a fine Judge than that he should be perfectly independent of popular opinion so far as that opinion was expressed upon pure questions of law. A just Judge ought never consult the popular will. In latter days we heard very much of corrupt Judges, and we cannot but join in the censure, if such there be, but the popular Judge was practically a greater curse to the community than the corrupt Judge. The latter will decide correctly and justly nine times out of one hundred; while the popular Judge will decide wrongly nine times out of ten, inasmuch as he sinks even below the level of an arbitrator, and administers the rough justice of an arbitrator mingled with a gross perversion of law, and unlike the arbitrator, leaving his decision on record to undermine the foundations of justice for all future time. It was well said by [illegible] that no greater curse could befall on any community than a popular Judge. In conclusion, he expressed his belief that the cause of justice and right was, at the present time, more than at any former period of the world's history, the popular cause and the winning cause. The leadership of that cause, to a large degree, was the Bar and the Judiciary. He only was fit to be numbered there who held as learning, his labor and his eloquence at the service of the injured and oppressed, and who ever where proved himself the friend of order and the saviour of peace.

Mr. REDFIELD was frequently applauded during the delivery of his able address.

The Ninth Assembly District Grant Club.

A meeting of the Ninth Assembly District Grant Club was held at Bleecker Buildings last evening, Mr. JAMES CUMMINGS, President, in the chair. At a late stage of the proceedings, Mr. JOSEPH SOUDER said that he had read in the papers that morning that the matter of the proposed reorganization of the Republican Party in this City had been laid over. He would like to know if there was anybody in the hall who could enlighten the Club upon the subject.

The Chairman said that he was at the meeting of the State Committee at the Fifth-avenue Hotel, on Thursday evening, and that he could gain no further information than that which had been published in the papers.

Mr. SOUDER said "That the Republican Party had been lying dormant for some time; it was dwindling away through cliquism. Those who are creating the division should be put away. If the party could be brought to unite an organization would be effected. The Central Committee—as things stand at present—are stealing all the thunder. He therefore would move that the Grant Club pass a resolution recommending a reorganization."

Mr. JOHN CAMPBELL said that he thought such action would be premature. There would be a meeting of prominent gentlemen of the Republican Party on Saturday evening, and he thought that it would be better for the Club to wait until these gentlemen were heard from. The motion was lost, and the Club then adjourned.

Money Put to Good Use.

NEW-YORK, Feb. 7, 1871.

John E. Williams, Esq., Treasurer Children's Aid Society:

DEAR SIR: Some time since I collected from the members of the New-York Produce Exchange $258 for the Peabody monument fund. This object seems to have fallen through. I have suggested the amount should be given to some charitable object, which has been assented to by many of the subscribers, and I know of none more worthy than your Society. Inclosed please find my check for the amount. I would like some acknowledgment of the same as the numerous subscribers can see their money has been devoted to some good purpose.

Respectfully yours, JOHN D. MAIRS.

NEW-YORK, Feb. 9, 1871.

John D. Mairs, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: It affords me pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of $258 for the benefit of the Children's Aid Society, which, with your kind permission, I shall see applied to the building fund of the Girls' Lodging-house for poor neglected girls of the City. I hope this will be as satisfactory a monument to the good intentions and kind feelings of the givers as if it had been expended in a costly monument.

Yours, truly,

JOHN E. WILLIAMS, Treasurer.

Closing of the Evening Schools.

The usual examination preparatory to the closing of the evening schools are now being held by the Superintendents of Public Instruction. Last Wednesday evening Mr. HARRISON examined the First Ward School, No. 29, in Greenwich-street, and expressed himself as highly satisfied with it. The first class especially, Mr. C. SULLIVAN, teacher, was equal in history, algebra and the higher branches, to any of the day schools that had been visited. There are ten classes in this school, and ten teachers. Mr. JOHN MCGINN is the Principal. The average attendance nightly during the four months' term just ended, has been 500 pupils. Last night they held their closing exercises, and went through a very varied programme, which occupied the time between 7 45 and 10¼ o'clock P. M. The orations, recitations, declamations and solos were as good as the average of such exercises in day schools, but there were far too many of them. At the close prizes were distributed to those pupils who had shown the greatest proficiency. THOS. SPRING took the first prizes in the first class of 27 scholars; MARTIN COONEY the second and MAURICE KEANE the third prize. The School Trustees and Inspectors of the Ward and other friends were present, as follow: Trustees—Wm. Weber, Geo. Leonard.

The school will close on Wednesday. The Fourth Ward schools will close on Tuesday next.

RELIGIOUS RESERVE.

The Right of Man to Keep His Thoughts and Feelings to Himself—Remarks by Rev. Henry Ward Beecher.

The attendance at the regular weekly prayer-meeting in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, last night, was very large. Mr. BEECHER was present and occupied the chair. He said that the subject to which he desired to call the attention of his audience was "Religious Reserve." There are, said he, many people who suppose that there is nothing that happens to them about which they are not willing to speak. That may be so, but then there is not much happens in such cases worth listening to. The lower you are, and the less worth the experiences become, the more willing you find people to disclose themselves. The higher the intellect, the richer the experiences, and the finer the feeling, the more worth knowing the condition, the greater will be found the reserve. Those persons that are very demonstrative have generally religion only like a corona round their real life, whereas, with the worthy, in proportion to the profitableness of that which is given to you is that which is retained within the heart; and as one is cultured deep in moral sense and rich in spiritual life, in that proportion will he be naturally reticent. He feels an impulse to reserve and a disposition to secrete. There is much in the experience of every Christian soul that cannot be expressed to any one—no, not even to God. When before the Maker, we can but say, "Search Thou me, and try me and know me." Thus there is a large undertone which we are not competent to form into ideas—a large undertone of rich experience which no man can give expression to. This reserve is natural to men from different causes. Delicacy, pride, fear and vague sensibility all contribute to the creation. And we are to remember that this indisposition to turn ourselves inside out grows usually with the growth of our religious nature. This is especially characteristic of Christ. He walked among men as a teacher and lived on the most familiar relation with his disciples, yet the expression "I have many things which you are unable to bear" is the expression of His whole life. He had great depths of feeling that He felt He could give no expression to. Now the question comes up, How far should any person attempt to overcome this tendency? We must respect the privacy of each other's soul-life, not in a sense of indifference, but with a feeling of sacredness. So much seclusion in religious life is unfavorable to the soul, but too much silence makes it superficial. No one should feel himself called upon to tell everything, but it is good to disclose ourselves when in the presence of one who sympathizes with us. There are three ways in which it is common to intrude upon the privileges of the soul in this direction. The first is in an assumed tone of authority; the second, in a tone of authority; and the third, in the language of cant. No man—not even the father of a child—is empowered by God to command this revelation. There is a sacred precinct into which we may retire, and into which no man has a right to demand entrance. Who has a right to come into my garden but I, that own it? In the cool of the day, when we hear even the footsteps of God among the groves, we hide ourselves and seek to cover our nakedness. And if such is the result in the presence of the Maker, how much more in the presence of another? When, therefore, priest or inquisitor or friends approach and say, "Open unto me," let them be shut out. No man has a right to say to me, "Show me what your soul is feeling." There is nothing more offensive to me than to be greeted in that rough religious way, "Well, brother BEECHER, how is your soul today?" None of your business. It is a kind of familiarity that I don't relish. If my father were to come to me on the ferry-boat and put his arm around my neck I should look up with pleasure, but should a stranger do the same thing, I should resent the action as an insult. And what I won't permit to be done to my body, I shall not tolerate on my soul. Mr. BEECHER at this point referred to the fact that parents often felt sad because their children did not appear to repose that trust in them, in a religious way, that might be expected, but he said this was usually the result, not of any lack of reverence or love, but because of a certain indescribable sympathy which the soul must find before revealing itself, and which is quite as likely to be found among companions as parents and relatives. He added that an instance of this kind had occurred with his own daughter; she preferring to speak upon religious subjects to a certain Aunty BROWN than to him. Yet, said he, instead of being sad or jealous, I thanked God for the manifestations of goodness in bringing out in his own way the religious life of my child.

The audience were dismissed with a blessing.

Riparian Rights—Injunction Issued Against the Erie Railway by Chancellor Zabriskie.

Decisions were rendered in the Court of Chancery, at Trenton, yesterday, by Hon. A. O. ZABRISKIE, Chancellor. The most important case decided was that of STEVENS vs. The Erie Railway Company, upon an application from STEVENS for an injunction to restrain the defendants from using the tracks of the Paterson and Newark Railway, in front of his property, on the Passaic River, near Newark. The plaintiff claimed that the enactments of the Legislature declaring all lands below high-water mark to belong to the State, was illegal, and that the Erie Railway Company in using the privileges thus granted was violating his rights. Chancellor ZABRISKIE ordered an injunction to be issued restraining the Company from driving more piles or laying more rails in front of the property, but refused to restrain them from using the tracks already laid.

A Monstrous Outrage.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I write to inquire whether a lady can advertise in your columns for "a situation," "as companion to an invalid lady" without being insulted? I advertised to the above effect in the Herald, and received a communication from a man who said he wanted a "confidential lady companion." Since we have reached a point in our boasted civilization where such arrangements have become habitual, why not have them completely systematized, so that the different classes of society may be a little more defined, and not interfere with each other? Let the Herald devote a certain number of columns to certain purposes which shall be distinctly understood by all. If you can suggest any other plan by which we can be protected, pray do so.

FRIDAY, Feb. 10, 1871. A LADY.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

NEW-YORK.

The case of ELIZABETH BRINKLEY, alias Lawson, alias Charles, against HUGH L. BRINKLEY, came up before Judge BARNARD, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday. The action is one for divorce, and came up on a motion for an allowance of alimony and counsel fee. The matter set up in the affidavits read on the motion is utterly unfit for the columns of this paper. The parties were never married, but have lived together many years. The plaintiff claims to be the wife of the defendant, and he claims that she is not. The defendant is said to be joint heir with his sister to an estate of $1,500,000, and the plaintiff is ten years his junior. The principal argument was had on the effect of the Tennessee judgment. Decision reserved. Mr. BROWN for motion, JOHN H. ANTHON opposed.

On Thursday afternoon a well-dressed lady, apparently suffering from illness or very much exhausted, was observed by the gate-keeper at the James-slip Ferry to enter the gentlemen's waiting-room. The gate-keeper had also noticed when the lady paid her fare that she had a large roll of bank bills in her possession. Shortly after she entered the waiting-room he saw two men of suspicious appearance follow her. He at once left his office and went into the waiting-room, when he discovered the lady asleep, and the two men in the very act of robbing her. The villains fled precipitately upon the entrance of the gate-keeper, and eluded arrest. It is supposed they had used chloroform, as the lady afterward said she had been overcome by sleep as soon as they entered the room.

Some days ago ARTHUR P. GRAHAM, fourteen years of age, left the residence of his aunt, Mrs. MARY POWELL, No. 7 East-street, Boston, taking with him $300 belonging to her, and a companion named CHARLES NEWELL, fifteen years of age. The boys came to this City, and taking lodgings at the Prescott House, hunted up a teacher of the art of clog-dancing, and providing themselves with clogs of the most approved pattern proceeded to acquaint themselves with that art at an expense of $40 to Mrs. POWELL in tuition fees alone. Yesterday, however, their professional career was cut short by Detective WILLINGTON, who arrested them on a telegram from Boston, and found GRAHAM had $155, while NEWELL had $98, so that the aunt is not a very heavy loser by the escapade. Both boys will be returned to Boston today.

The Macnus Gross Association met at Germania Hall, No. 200 Third-avenue, on Thursday evening last, and completed the election of their officers with the following result: GERSON N. HERMANN, President; Col. H. Lux and N. Muller, Vice-Presidents; Dr. J. S. Nagle and Charles W. Kruger, Secretaries; Otto H. Coop, Treasurer; John Landesman, Fred. Zimmer, Alderman Edward Schlichting, Ernest C. Berckman, Hermann Stimmerman, Hermann G. Schroeder, John P. Schmenger, Owen Murphy, David M. Koehler, Hermann Schroeder, Fred. Rollwagen and Josiah Carpenter, Executive Committee, and Aaron Friedsam, Sergeant-at-Arms.

About 2 o'clock yesterday morning the residence of Mrs. ELIZA GREEN, of No. 83 Lexington-avenue, was broken into by JOHN WILLIAMS and a confederate, and four damask curtains valued at $1,000 were stolen by them. The burglars were seen to leave the premises by Officer CLARSON, of the Eighteenth Precinct, and having deposited the property on the sidewalk were about to return to the house, when a arrested WILLIAMS and brought him to the Station. Judge LEDWITH committed him for trial yesterday.

A verdict was given for the Government at the United States District Court, before Judge BLATCHFORD, yesterday, in the case brought for the condemnation of a quantity of cutlery, worth about $400, on the ground that its proper value had not been fully estimated in the invoices by Mr. PETRE, the consignee of the goods. Assistant District-Attorney SIMONS conducted the case for the Government.

On Thursday evening, JAMES HUGHES visited the eating saloon of Mr. SEDWITH, of No. 364 South-street, and ate nine dozen of the largest oysters from the shell within half an hour. On payment being demanded he indignantly refused to give any, and he was given in custody to an officer, who conveyed him to the Station-house. Yesterday, he was arraigned before Judge LEDWITH, at Essex Market Court, but on payment of the debt he was released, with a reprimand.

GEORGE LESLIE met PETER HALL, a sailor, residing at No. 132 Cherry-street, on Thursday night in a Bowery saloon, when, finding that HALL was quite intoxicated, he deliberately slipped his hand into his victim's pocket and took possession of $50 in money. HALL followed the thief into the street and seized but was compelled to let him go as his hands were sore from being frost-bitten at sea. An officer arrested LESLIE, however, and Justice HOGAN held him for trial.

Rev. G. J. MINGINS, Superintendent of City Missions, delivered a lecture on "Incidents of Travel," last night, at Association Building-room, No. 207 Church-street, for the benefit of the working men of the First Ward. Mr. MINGINS' popularity as a lecturer attracted a large and very appreciative audience. The lecturer was introduced by D. E. HAWLEY, Esq., who stated that he had arranged a course of lectures, to be delivered in the same place monthly, or oftener, by the most talented lecturers in the City.

DANIEL GILL and THOMAS NOLAN were arraigned before Justice HOGAN, yesterday, at the Tombs, to answer a charge of picking pockets. PATRICK HARVEY, living at the corner of Plymouth and Adams streets, Brooklyn, was in the City Hall Park on Thursday afternoon, when he felt the prisoners pushing against him. Suspecting that they were pickpockets, HARVEY felt of his pantaloons pocket and satisfied himself that his wallet containing $65 was safe. Finding that GILL and NOLAN still continued their movements, the complainant felt his own, his hand to remove the wallet to an inside coat, when he discovered that he had been robbed. Both of the accused were remanded for examination.

Coroner YOUNG held an inquest yesterday in the case of GEO. W. WITTENBERG, the young man who shot himself at No. 165 Greene-street, on Wednesday. No new facts were developed, and the jury rendered a verdict of suicidal death. His funeral will take place from the residence of his parents on York-street, Jersey City, to-morrow.

JAMES GALLAGHER died at Bellevue Hospital, yesterday, of injuries sustained at the Boulevard Hotel, on the 7th inst., in some unexplained manner. Deputy-Coroner MARSH made a post-mortem examination, and ascertained that the base of the skull had been fractured. An inquest will be held to-day by Coroner YOUNG, at the office of the Board.

A correspondent puts the pertinent inquiry whether the escape of so many convicts from the State Prison at Sing Sing is not the result of gross carelessness on the part of the prison officials? Hardly a week passes in which a convict does not escape, and many of them are never recaptured, and if they are at all at considerable expense. Certainly the matter ought to be inquired into.

Messrs. W. AHRENS and W. J. SLANE contradict the report in relation to the fire which occurred on their premises on the morning of the 9th inst., and give the credit of saving their lives to CHAS. L. KELLY, Assistant Foreman Engine Company No. 9, who entered their apartments and rescued every one of the occupants. He lowered Mr. AHRENS and his child, and Mrs. DORA AHRENS, from the window to the sidewalk, and also assisted Mr. FRED. AHRENS, Wm. AHRENS, and Mrs. WM. SLANE to escape by the stairway.

Mr. CHARLES F. ALLEN, President of the Mercantile Library Association, having invited VICTORIA C. WOODHULL to deliver her "Constitutional Argument on Constitutional Equality" before the Association, the lady has declined to do so at present on account of prior engagements, but expresses the hope that she will be able ere long to comply with the invitation.

During the month of January, 276 new patients were entered on the books of the North-eastern Homeopathic Dispensary, in Fifty-fifth-street, near Second-avenue, ninety-three visits were made, and of thirteen operations four were of importance. A large number were vaccinated. The staff consists of Dr. Seeger, chief physician; Dr. H. N. Dunnell, surgeon; Dr. J. J. Wallace, Dr. Richardson and others.

The next lecture in the free course of scientific lectures for the people, at the Cooper Union, will take place in the Great Hall this evening at 8 o'clock. Subject—"The Anatomy and Natural History of Insections." Lecturer, Dr. ADRIAN J. EBELL.

In the case of EUGENE BERTHOLOT, by her guardian, against GERTRUDE HURDY, reported in yesterday's TIMES, in which the defendant was charged with procuring a life-policy to be charged to her name without authority, Judge ROBINSON has rendered a decision in favor of defendant, ordering that the preliminary injunction be vacated with $10 costs.

Mr. F. J. DEPEYSTER repeated his lecture entitled "The Europe of To-morrow," before a large audience at the Hall of the Bloomingdale Lyceum, corner of Ninety-ninth-street and Broadway.

CHARLES VON LIBKEN, a German, nineteen years of age, and a sailor on board the bark Jennie, lying at Pier No. 50 East River, yesterday fell from the topsail-yard to the deck of a tug-boat lying alongside, fracturing his skull and right leg. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

Two young men, named MICHAEL LYNCH and MICHAEL CONNERS, lately of Tompkinsville, Staten Island, have been missing for six weeks.

The fifth annual dinner of the graduates of Harvard College and its schools will take place at Delmonico's Feb. 22, 1871, at 6½ P. M. Tickets may be obtained of A. W. GREEN, Secretary, at No. 52 Wall-street.

A fire occurred yesterday among some cotton samples in the office of Messrs. CHARLES N. KENNEY & Co., cotton brokers, at No. 152 Pearl-street. While engaged in extinguishing the flames, J. M. CARTER, one of the firm, was seriously burned about the face and hands. The damage to the stock and fixtures was slight.

A boy playing with matches in the apartment of WILLIAM H. CRAFT, on the third floor of No. 372½ Bowery, yesterday, set fire to a bed, causing damage to the amount of $100. Insured.

BROOKLYN.

The reading-room of the Liberal Christian Association, on Fulton-avenue near Duffield-street, is now open all day on Sundays to readers. On the tables and shelves are to be found most of the leading American daily and weekly newspapers, besides a large number of the most valuable monthly magazines published in this country and Europe. There is a room specially set apart for boys, where during the week they can amuse themselves by playing checkers, or, if desirous of information, may receive instruction in the common branches of English education. The managers of this institution are doing an excellent work.

THOMAS ROURKE, employed in the paper manufactory of PHELPS & CO., on Carroll-street, near Nevins, accidentally fell into a boiler of boiling mash, on Thursday afternoon, and was only saved from a horrible death by the action of one of the girls employed in the work, who ran to his assistance and held him up until sufficient help came to remove him from his perilous position. He was badly burned about the lower part of the body.

CHARLES A. BARCLAY and WILLIAM SCOTT were, on complaint of the Mayor, yesterday arraigned before Justice WALSH, on a charge of of fraud, alleged to have been perpetrated upon a certain Mrs. C. HUBBARD, of Michigan. The swindle charged is the old and well-known one of advertising music-boxes, and sending to those foolish enough to forward money "jews-harps" in return. Being unprepared for trial, they were each held in $1,000 bail to appear on Monday.

Officer HAMILTON, of the Sixth Precinct, was yesterday fined two days' imprisonment by the Police Commissioners for calling the Captain of the Precinct a liar, &c., and for desiring to fight with Sergt. SLOAT. The trouble grew out of the disposition of the force placed upon the track of the mysterious Eastern District assassin.

A committee appointed by the Directors of the City Railroad Company called upon the Corporation Counsel and the Mayor, yesterday, for the purpose of learning in detail the demands of the authorities upon the Company concerning the condition of the road, and the accomodation to be furnished to travelers. Hitherto the Brooklyn city railroads have been considered among the worst in the country.

Shortly after 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon fire broke out in a two-story frame house, situated at No. 191 Java street, occupied as a studio by EMIL SLUTER, and before extinguished destroyed about $3,000 worth of paintings, and damaged the building to the extent of $1 000. No insurance. An adjoining house, occupied by HENRY BROOKS, was damaged to the extent of $500.

ANDREW DOYLE, liquor-dealer in South Brooklyn, who was convicted in the City Court on Thursday of committing an outrage upon a little girl, was sentenced yesterday by Judge MCCUE to five years' imprisonment.

FREDERICK OGDEN, twenty-two years of age, residing at No. 363 Pacific-street, blew his brains out, yesterday morning, with a pistol. He had been insane for some time past. Coroner JONES held an inquest.

The residence of Mr. MICHAEL MURPHY, No. 260 DeKalb-avenue, was entered by thieves at a late hour on Thursday evening, and robbed of $380 worth of silver-ware.

The Finance Committee of the Common Council will report on Monday in favor of paying $3,215 to Judge GEO. THOMPSON, for legal services rendered to the old City of Williamsburg.

NEW-JERSEY.

GEORGE DISBROW, sexton of the Zion M. E. Church, on Academy-street, Newark, a colored man, was yesterday appointed a special policeman by Mayor RECORD. The appointment was made by request of the pastor of the church and several citizens, to enable the sexton to quell disturbances which often arise in the church, caused by loafers, who consider it high sport to disturb the services at a colored church.

The bill to revise and amend the charter of Elizabeth provides for the creation of a Department of Finance, the chief executive officer of which shall be a Controller, to be appointed by the Mayor elect, at a salary of $3,000 a year and one-fourth of one per cent. of all moneys collected by him. The Board of Finance shall consist of the Mayor, Controller, and three freeholders, the latter to be appointed by the Judge of the Circuit Court of Union County. The Controller will be required to furnish bonds in the sum of $100,000. A receiver of taxes, who shall hold office for two years, to be appointed by the Mayor, is also provided for. His sole compensation shall be one per cent. on all the moneys collected by him.

NATHAN BERG and CHARLES HASS were yesterday sent to the County Jail to await the action of the Grand Jury on the charge of having killed BERNHARDT KRAFT, at Union Hill, on Monday night. The men were held on account of the verdict of the Coroner's jury implicating them in his death.

On Thursday afternoon, while LOUIS MOST was sitting with a friend near the fire-work factory at Greenville, MOST placed the muzzle of his rifle, with which he had been gunning, against his breast, and while swaying his feet to and fro one of them accidentally struck the trigger and the charge of buck-shot "went off," the contents entering his body and causing instant death. A verdict of accidental shooting was returned.

Instead of diminishing, the small-pox is rather increasing in Newark. Two new cases were reported to the Health Officers yesterday, and it is likely that there are many which are never reported to the authorities. Mr. WILLIAM F. JACOBUS, a hame manufacturer, living at No. 45 Howard-street, fell a victim to the disease, and was buried yesterday.

A ferry-boat which left the Long Dock, Jersey City, yesterday, was three hours and a half in making her slip, foot of Twenty-third-street, New-York. The ferry-boat which left Desbrosses-street, at six o'clock last evening, did not arrive at the Jersey City slip till 7¾. The immense masses of ice in the river caused the delay.

The ladies named in the bill now before the Legislature to incorporate the Home for Aged Women in Elizabeth, are among the élite of that city. The bill authorizes the incorporators to take and hold by gift, purchase or otherwise, real and personal estate to an amount not exceeding $500,000.

MAGDALENA POMPLANTER was before the Newark Police Court, yesterday, and entered a complaint against her husband, AUGUST, who turned her and her infant child out of doors at midnight. He was in a drunken fit.

The inquest over the body of Mr. LEMUEL BREWSTER, of Orange, who was killed on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad on Monday, is finished. The jury returned a verdict of accidental death, and exonerated the Railroad Company.

The Adams express-car on the western train, Thursday night, was discovered to be on fire as it passed through Bergen cut. The train was stopped and the goods thrown out. The loss is between $4,000 and $5,000. The fire was caused by sparks falling under the door.

The curve on the Pavonia-avenue and West End Horse-car Railroad, at Jersey City, where so many accidents have lately occurred, is being straightened and re-graded.
